K-State reaches agreement over waste charges

By JENNIFER O'NEILL and JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has fined K-State more than $29,000 after a March 1999 state inspection found the university in violation of hazardous waste standards.

Rather than pay a heavy fine for improper handling and storage of hazardous materials on campus, K-State has agreed to set up environmental projects, including an additional recycling program.

The KDHE found K-State had 12 violations, including illegal disposal of certain hazardous waste on campus, storing of hazardous waste for greater than 90 days, failure to mark storage containers with the words "Hazardous Waste" and failure to conduct weekly inspections of hazardous waste storage areas.

"The violations that the university occurred were minor," said Steve Galitzer, director of the Department of Environmental Health and Safety for K-State. "It is not that we were doing anything that was extremely dangerous. It is just that extra precautions must be taken with these type of chemicals."

A joint agreement between K-State and the KDHE called for the university to perform environmental projects in order to avoid the

Mike Heideman, acting KDHE public information director, said that for a three annual Resource Conservation and Recovery Act workshop, provide annual hazardous waste training for all university employees and hire a student to work in the university's Department of Environmental Health and

The workshop's purpose is to inform and help Kansas colleges and universities, as well as all post-secondary education facilities, to be in compliance with federal and state waste regulations, specifically recycling hazardous, medical and universal waste. The cost of the project is about $15,000.

The student intern at the Department of Environmental Health and Safety will be responsible for reviewing the entire year period, K-State has agreed to conduct an university for pollution prevention opportunities. Where appropriate, the intern will implement waste minimization and pollution prevention. This part of the program will cost about $18,000.

> Part of the agreement also calls for the university to implement a program for recycling batteries and fluorescent lights, to establish a free drop-off point for the Riley County Household Hazardous Waste Program and to submit quarterly project reports to KDHE.

The recycling program will require all departments at K-State to deposit all spent batteries and fluorescent lights with the Department of Environmental Health and

The dropoff point for Riley County residents will mean placing several chemical storage cabinets at Edwards Hall and developing a household hazardous waste program for students living in the residence halls and lardine Terrace Apartments. The cost of this project is estimated at $36,000, Heideman

The estimated total for all of the projects. $101,000, is more than three times the cost of the fine.

Heideman said state law mandates if an organization enters into agreement in lieu of a fine, the minimum monetary obligation necessary to satisfy the proposed penalty

Army medics dug their knees and elbows into the dirt as they drug their patient under 18-inch high barbed wire. Their breath was heavy under gas masks as sniper fire pierced yellow smoke.

The soldiers were four of 163 training at Fort Riley for an upcoming test, April 16-20, for the expert field medical badge. The badge is one of the most prestigious available to Army personnel, but only 18 percent of those tested

The test for the badge includes a written exam and series of obstacle courses designed to simulate combat.

Maj. Scott Carpenter, officer in charge of testing, received his badge in 1988. He subsequently was deployed to Saudi Arabia, where he served in Desert Storm.

"This (the obstacle courses), along with the written test, made me a better soldier and medical officer and helped me survive on the battlefield," Carpenter said.

The course described above was part of the what the Army calls the "littler course." "Littler" is another word for stretcher. A fourperson team must carry a 130-150 pound person through rough terrain and eight obstacles. The first obstacle is a 6-foot-high wall. Sgt. Gary Ream, who was in charge of the Celebration of Cobb's life tonight

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas Stan Collegian

A celebration of life ceremony will be given at 6 tonight in All Faiths Chapel in honor of a K-State student who committed suicide early Friday evening.

A service, organized by the friends and colleagues of Andrew Charles "Drew" Cobb II, sophomore in graphic design, will begin with a prayer walk that will start at the chapel and continue through campus.

An hour later, at 7 p.m., participants will return to the chapel to listen to the music of the United Black Voices, of which Cobb was a member, and to reflect, pray and speak about the effect Cobb had on the lives of others.

"We're doing this service with an emphasis on giving. an opportunity to everyone to share their stories, both in remembrance of Drew and with memories of his life," he said.

"We're not trying to give the impression that it is a memorial service. Students need a chance to express. what they're going through right now."

Daphne Maxwell, director of United Black Voices. said she agreed that the services should be a time of reflection and positive memories.

It's an opportunity for everyone who wants to come and share, sing, reflect and pray," Maxwell said, "We want it to be uplifting and positive because that's the way he touched our lives.

'We want people to come together and reflect on the special meaning Andrew holds in their lives."

Maxwell, who said she thinks of Cobb as a son, said she remembers Cobb as someone who touched the lives of many.

'He was an extraordinary young man." she said. "He was a quiet and humble spirit. I'm blessed by having Drew in UVB for the last two years."

Proposed transit system under discussion by city officials

Operating statistics of transit system

The following transportation routes have been proposed by TranSystems Corp. to the city of Manhattan. The plan is under discussion by city officials, but no formal action has been taken. Below are recommended hours of operation:

Days of operation	of service	Service frequency
All year Two-route system	6 p.m. to 10 p.m 6 a.m. to 10 p.m	60 minutes 60 minutes
Academic Year (August to May) Aggeville Special Fridays and Saturdays	. 10 p.m. to 2 a.m	60 minutes
Bramlage Park and Ride Shuttle Monday through Friday	6 a.m. to 6 p.m	10 minutes*

* The 10-minute service frequency will be from 7 a.m. to 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. During the rest of the times, it will be 20 minutes.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Kansas State Collegian

The highly controversial plan for a Manhattan transit system took a final bow Tuesday night with the consultants' final report at the Manhattan City Commission's planning session

Ted Rieck, associate with TranSystems Corp., presented a plan very similar to the draft brought before the commission last January as far as routes

The TranSystems proposal featured two yearround routes, one moving between the Northview and Candlewood areas and the other between the Stagg Hill and Wal-Mart areas. It also recommended two other plans, a Bramlage Park and Ride Shuttle and an Aggieville Special. The Bramlage Park and Ride Shuttle. would run between the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot and the main K-State campus on weekdays, and the Aggieville Special would run in a roughly square pattern with Seth Child Road and the Wal-Mart area at opposite ends and the K-State campus in the middle.

The big question with the plan is, who would bear the cost. City officials and consultants hoped Manhattan would reach a population of 50,000 or more in the 2000 Census, guaranteeing the more than $500,000 forecasted as state and federal funding for the project. Manhattan didn't hit the 50,000 mark, but the transit plan's total cost still is an estimated $1.4

Rieck said it still could be financed with more money from the K-State or city portions. Raising the student fee from a proposed $10 a semester to $15 could make a big dent, he said.

"Certainly it would be better to get the state and federal funds than not," he said.

Director of Community Development Karen Davis also said the Manhattan area might not be left out in the cold as far as federal funding. If census results show the area reaching a high enough density, Davis said it still could qualify as an urbanized area entitled to some level of funding. Rieck also mentioned the possibility of receiving earmarked federal funds, for which the Kansas Department of Transportation applied last month on Manhattan's behalf.

Dustin Leonard, senior in anthropology, said previous efforts to install a SafeRide program in Aggieville have failed when proposed at as little as $5 a semester. The Aggieville Special route is needed badly, he said, but he wasn't sure students would pay for it.

"I'm kind of wondering why students would be willing to spend $10 to $20 now," he said to the Commissioner Bruce Snead said survey results for the report suggested students might pay the higher

Tax increase could help state's budget problems

TOPEKA - Legislators should increase taxes to help solve the state's budget problems, University of Kansas Chancellor Robert Hemenway says.

Hemenway acknowledged Monday that legislators could solve the problems by cutting $185 million in spending from recommendations they've already approved for the state's 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

However, he told The Topeka Capital-Journal's editorial board Monday that cuts of such magnitude would do long-term damage to the state's university system.

"It is going to have to be some combination of setting priorities, revenue enhancement," Hemenway said.

And, as some legislators have commented, Hemenway said large tax cuts in the late 1990s are at least partially to blame for the state's budget problems.

Forecasters last week cut their predictions for the amount of revenues the state will collect over the next 15 months. The $185 million represents the gap between spending approved by lawmakers for fiscal 2002 and the new estimates of how much money the state expects to have.

Even if legislators cut spending $185 million, overall appropriations from the state general fund would grow about $45 million, or 1 percent. The $4.6 billion general fund is where the state has most of its tax revenues and the largest source of money for Kansas government programs.

Legislators plan to reconvene April 25 to consider one last spending bill and wrap up their work for the year.

McVeigh's final deadline 2 hours before execution

WASHINGTON, D.C. Timothy McVeigh's last chance to ask for a stay of execution will be two hours before he's scheduled to die, when he will be allowed to meet with his lawyers for the last

Justice Department officials, speaking on condition of anonymity Monday, described parts of an elaborate process to handle any last-minute legal interruptions of McVeigh's execution. scheduled for May 16 at a federal prison in Terre Haute, Ind.

Visits by family members and attorneys will be curtailed two hours ahead of the execution. officials said. If McVeigh wants his lawyers to ask a judge or the president for a stay, he must do so at that final meeting. Prison officials won't consider a request for a delay by McVeigh after that, officials said.

Prison officials at the execution command center, set up at the Terre Haute prison to coordinate security among state, federal and local law enforcement agencies and handle all procedural matters, will make last-minute phone calls to the White House and check with several courts to see whether McVeigh's lawyers have filed any requests to stop the execution.

Calls will go out to the White House and the courts 45 minutes before the execution; the last ones will be made with 10 minutes to go. Officials overseeing the execution also can be reached in the execution room - up to the moment that the executioner is to administer the lethal injection if a delay is ordered.

McVeigh ordered his attorneys not to file further appeals in January and asked that a date be set for his execution. But he still could seek clemency from the White House or instruct his lawyers to seek a stay. The government has not executed a federal prisoner in 37 years. Procedures for handling federal executions have been finalized and will be applied for the first time in the McVeigh execution.

Industry supports lower legal blood alcohol level

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The liquor industry has agreed to support a lower threshold for drunken driving.

The liquor lobby said Tuesday it will urge state legislatures to lower the legal standard for drunken driving to 0.08 percent blood alcohol content. Most states now have a 0.10 standard.

Industry representatives made their pledge at a news conference with Transportation Secretary Norman Y. Mineta and Mothers Against Drunk Driving President Millie Webb to push for the tighter standard, which proponents say could save 500 lives a year.

Legislation signed last fall by President Clinton would take away 2 percent of federal highway funds. from states who fail to adopt the 0.08 standard by 2004.

Bartender balances school, work

By STEFANIE HOWARD Kansas State Collegian

This isn't how someone usually would describe a typical day at work, but for fill Bieker, a bartender at Silverado Saloon, it is all too familiar.

Bicker started bartending at Silverado three years ago after spending two years as a waitress.

"I learned how to bartend just by watching others while I was a waitress," said Bieker, graduate student in food microbiology.

If there were drinks she didn't know how to make, Bieker said, she would ask other bartenders for

Most of Bicker's customers are male, and Bieker said they are more willing to tip bartenders than females. Because they are male. Bieker said she and the other female bartenders get their fair share of getting hit on.

"Some people may think it would be flattering, and sometimes it is, but it also can be annoying," Bieker said

Bicker said she not only bartends, but she also watches out for her customers and their wellbeing. She said this can be difficult, and people get upset when she does things like cut them off from

"You have to use your best judge of character, which can be difficult. I am glad I don't have to do this often," Bicker said. "I just want customers to have a good time and not to put themselves or others at risk of getting hurt."

The downside to Bieker's job, she said, is the late nights and lack of sleep.

"I have done it for so long that I am starting to get used to it," Bieker good bartender.

The late hours do catch up to Bieker, especially when she works weeknights. She said getting up and going to class the next day is difficult. Bieker said even though she works, school comes first.

"If I have a lot of schoolwork to do during a particular week, I won't go into work," Bieker said.

As a graduate research assistant. Bieker must balance a demanding schedule of classes and the research required for her degree and for the university.

"I consider my schoolwork as an eight-to-five job. I even have an office," Bieker said.

Standoff between U.S., China could continue

By SCOTT LINDLAW The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. -President Bush counseled patience Tuesday in the standoff with China, but called the 10-day ordeal involving a captive spy plane's crew a stalemate that might not

"Diplomacy sometimes takes a little longer than people would like," the president said during an Oval Office session with reporters. "I urge the Chinese to bring resolution to this issue. It's time for our people to come home.

"This administration is doing everything we can to end the stalemate in an efficient way. We're making the right decisions to bring the (situation) to an end," said Bush, who has refrained from characterizing the standoff.

It was the second straight day he had prepared Americans for the possibility that the standoff could drag on. The remarks came as the president faced increased pressure from both ends of the political spectrum to bring the 24-member crew home without major capitulation to China.

"This could get resolved quickly, or it could get resolved in a matter of time," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Bush sidestepped a question about whether he intended to get in touch with Chinese President Jiang Zemin, but he said, "I am making it clear to the Chinese it is in their nation's interests to end this situation as quickly as possible."

Earlier, Bush spoke with Army Brig. Gen. Neal Sealock, who met the crew for a fifth time Tuesday.

Bush turned aside an offer by the Rev. Jesse Jackson to visit China and try to get the crew released.

"I appreciate the good will of a lot of Americans who are concerned about our folks on Hainan island," Bush said during a photo session with King Abdullah II of Jordan. "This administration is doing everything it can ... to end the situation in an efficient way." Secretary of State Colin Powell already had turned down Jackson's

Meanwhile, Pentagon officials revealed more details of how the Navy spy plane came to collide with a Chinese fighter jet, saying the new information bolsters the argument that the accident was not caused by the American plane.

Sealock, who is the military attache at the embassy in Beijing, told Bush that he and the crew discussed the retirement of Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman, the death of baseball All-Star Willie Stargell and Michael Jordan's possible return to playing basketball.

Sealock said the crew members are aware of the standoff that is keeping them prisoner. "We discussed the emotions on both sides," he told reporters in Hainan, the island where the Americans are being kept. "They realize it is a political situation.

In their meetings, crew members also have shed more light on how the air accident happened, Pentagon officials said, quoting a State Department cable reporting the pilot said the big four-engine plane was on autopilot at the time of the collision

Officials offered this new information as more proof for their argument that the U.S. spy plane was flying straight and steady, not deviating speed, altitude or direction. China has said the U.S. plane had swerved into the fighter jet.

A Pentagon official speaking on condition of anonymity also said the crew has reported that the Chinese F-8 jet made two close passes before the collision. The Chinese jet crashed into the South China Sea and its pilot is presumed dead.

Fleischer said Bush believes progress is being made and urged patience, particularly among conservatives who have stepped up their anti-China rhetoric and have begun to question Bush's handling of the situation.

Vienna educating citizens about currency change

Editor's note: "Around the World" is a seven-part series examining European countries and capitals.

Part 3: Athens, Greece Part 4: Vienna, Austria Part 5: Ljubljana, Slovenia

VIENNA, Austria - The booklets are everywhere. They are most valued by school children for the play money inside, but attempting to educate those of all ages about a new arrival.

Their task is a large one. This baby is a very special

In less than nine months, the booklets must educate the just more than 300 million people of the 12 participating European Union members about the new currency.

Beginning as the clock strikes midnight Dec. 31, the much-anticipated euro will arrive. All national currencies will be slowly phased in 2002, from the most widely used Deutschmark to the Francs of tiny Luxembourg.

Education is full-scale here in Vienna, as with most large cities in the EU nations. Prices for goods are bar coded in both Austrian schillings and euros.

The Austrian schilling was set at a fixed rate along with the 11 other national currencies Jan. 1, 1999. Therefore, shoppers are used to prices in euros. The booklets are part of a large campaign to educate the public about the new eans bills and coinage

Bills of 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 200, and 500 euros will be produced. Each bill will increase in size with denomination, to limit confusion.

Two euro coins will feature a golden center circled by a silver ring, while one curo coin will be slightly smaller and have a golden ring around a silver center.

Coins of 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, and 50 euro cents will feature a common reverse depicting the denomination.

Similar to the U.S. quarters, all coins will be specific to the country of origin. allowing each country to design the obverse. Austria will display Mozart, Bertha-ZAC COOK von Suttner and Stephansdom on threecoins. Educational campaigns are nothing new to Vienna. The city has been promoting diversity with the implementation of "G" trams. These trams, decked in green, patrol the city streets like a party wagon.

They have food and loud music, encouraging people to be tolerant of different lifestyles, customs and traditions. At each stop, the trams "host" jumps off with microphone in hand and encourages people to embark, all in quick German spurts.

For those with only partial understanding of German, like myself, one just had to stand and look confused. Then nod, smile and realize diversity programs can even work across language barriers.

One thing every visitor to Vienna surely will notice is the cleanliness of the city compared to the rest of Eastern Europe. Second, expensive Austrian prices really grab-

> Case in point. A cheer went up from the American crowd as we found a Subway restaurant at which to sup. I remembered my last footlong deal for about $5 in the K-State Student Union back in early February. However, the same deal in Vienna was 107 schillings ($7 U.S.)!

In the WC (water closet), another mark of Vienna's affluence was found.

Instead of spray paint graffiti scrawled on the wall, artist neatly printed their Web site addresses in permanent marker. I never thought I would see upscale graffiti.

KSU needs to offer students options for Apple platform

Editor,

I am writing this letter knowing that I am in the minority at K-State. I am in the minority because I work with and own a Macintosh computer. That's right, a beloved fan of the Apple computer line. Knowing the majority of campus and students do not use Macs from day to day, and instead use Windows-based machines, I believe, and have found, that K-State is against us Mac users.

For those of you who don't know or are unaware, K-State used to have a public Mac computer lab on campus in Nichols Hall. However, in 1998, K-State felt the need for a change. The change was based on money alone, and Computing and Network Services never even attempted to contact students and faculty, or justify their decision for taking out the Macintosh platform in the public labs. So, because of this action, not only were students who use the Mac platform left out to dry; however, the College of Education, art, music. journalism, English and others were left without the computer system that runs their department. Imagine all the students in education who need and use Macs not having public access to them for assignments and projects. Education is a huge college at K-State, and that amount of students alone should have public access to the computers that they need for schooling. But they cannot, because K-State says the funding is not there for the Mac. After emailing back and forth to Elizabeth Unger, vice provost of Academic Services and Technology, she claims that K-State does have a public Mac lab in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications in Kedzie Hall. This is not true. Not only is the IMC computer lab for journalism majors only, but it is in no way funded or supported by K-State at all (it's supported by private money from (MC). Therefore, it is not a public Mac computer lab that students can have access to at any time of day, like the Windows computer labs on campus.

There are small Mac labs that can be used privately and for departmental use only on campus, but none that are public. And those private labs are too small to house the demand or number of students who need them any way.

So the question is, does K-State fully support and meet its students' needs when it comes to Information Technology and multi-platform computers? Or are they more wrapped up in the fact that we are "#33 in the nation in Yahoo's Most Wired Colleges" list? If you ask Unger, the latter prevails, and, unfortunately, it is the philosophy that keeps a lot of K-State colleges and students out to dry.

So, for those of you in education and other Mac-based colleges, if you cannot get your big project done because the Mac labs on campus are private, I would encourage you to ask K-State to implement the Mac OS platform into our public labs again.

With the upcoming release of OS X.

the most advanced operating system in the world, there is not a better time then to get the necessary Apple equipment for the students who want and need them Voice your concerns to Student Senate, CNS, and Computing and Information Sciences so the basic computer needs of K-State students can be met by installing Macs back into our public lab system. After all, they need less support, are easier to maintain, easier to use and, most importantly, they are perfect for educational use. So, K-State, I ask that you consider what students need, when it comes to computing, instead of depriving their needs due to saving a buck or two.

Think differently.

Rings might affect student choices Marijuana legalization topic of debate

Kansas State Collegian

The official K-State class ring that will be available from Artcarved next year might affect local businesses as well as students.

While K-State fashion rings still will be available at local retail stores, the K-State Union Bookstore is the only place where students will be able to purchase the official K-State class ring.

Although fashion rings might contain emblems or logos associated with K-State, such as a Powercat, they do not include a year or degree like the official ring will, said Kathy Yates, merchandise division manager at the Union Bookstore.

"There are still a lot of people who do not like class rings because they look like class rings, but still want something that represents the university," Yates said.

The requirements to purchase an official K-State class ring have not yet been set, but Yates said the ring will be a unifying aspect for the university and will tell a story about the university experience.

With the implementation of an official class ring, students will be able to customize the style chosen but will not have an opportunity to create their own ring.

Janét Bozarth, assistant soft goods manager at Varney's Book Store, said many people want to have their own unique ring instead of only being able to choose from one style.

"Varney's as a whole is a little disappointed we will not be able to provide a variety for students to choose from," Bozarth said.

Bozarth said this is the last semester Varney's will be carrying a line of class rings manufactured by Jostens.

Even though the implementation of an official class ring does not allow students the opportunity to create their own ring, a campuswide ring committee is working to ensure the opinions and demands of students

Mitzi Frieling, associate director of alumni programs for the KSU Alumni Association, said the ring committee composed of students. faculty, alumni, Union Bookstore staff and administrators heard three, two-hour presentations from different companies that manufacture class rings.

Of the three companies - Milestone Traditions, Jostens and Artcarved - the committee invited two of the companies back to give additional presentations before deciding on Artcarved to produce the official class ring.

Frieling said Artcarved has done research about K-State and has administered a survey to more than 500 K-State students regarding the class rings' requirements and design.

"Artcarved has more of a philosophy of getting as many students involved as possible," Frieling said.

She said that in the past, students could order rings from many local businesses such as Varney's, jewelry stores, Wal-Mart and even on

"Anyone could order a class ring," Frieling said. "We wanted to make something special where you had to earn the right to wear the

Verbal volleys and hard statistics characterized a debate about whether marijuana should be legalized Tuesday evening in Union Forum Hall. Union Program Council sponsored the debate between Allen St. Pierre, director of the National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws, and Peter Bensinger, administrator of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency under the administrations of presidents Ford, Carter and Reagan.

"No one has a civil right to violate the law," Bensinger said. "If you want to change the laws. there are ways to do it through legislation."

Bensinger, now the chief executive officer of a privately owned firm that provides services promoting a drug-free workplace, said he supports drug testing because it identifies substances that impair people's ability to function in the work place and on the highways.

really boils down to four words. "No victim, no crime. It's really that simple," he said.

He characterized manijuana as a relatively harmless drug when compared with many legal drugs, such as tobacco and alcohol. He said tests show that marijuana is only mildly addictive, right behind caffeine, and he said it hasn't killed anybody.

"We have a terrible false paradigm in this country that the use of marijuana equals its ahuse," St. Pierre said.

The responsibility for drug enforcement shifted to business in the mid-1980s, St. Pierre said. They had to initiate drug testing because it was a rider in their government contracts.

The debate didn't change the minds of many of the students who attended the forum.

"It didn't change my view on whether marijuana should be legal," Erik Rome, freshman in marketing, said. "It gave me more information on both K-State starting pitcher Chad Duckers tries to send one past Maryland during K-State's 10-8 victory over the Terrapins. The win moved K-State to 14-20 for the season.

A good, ugly win

Wildcats defeat Maryland 10-8 in 7 innings despite errors, rain delay

By DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

ather wasn't the only ugly thing Tuesday ernoon at Frank Myers Field Amid periods of torrential downpour, the top of the sixth inning, K-State (14-20) and Maryland (10-21) combined to commit eight errors and use six different pitchers in the contest. The game was called in the seventh imning to due to the Terrapins'

Nevertheless, it was the Wildcars that came out on top, downing Maryland 10-8 to sweep the two-game series.

K-State also outslugged the Terps, 11-8, in Monday night's action at Wayne Norvell Field, and the two victories give the Cats three wins in the past four games since breaking a five-game losing streak April 5.

"There's such a thing as good, ugly wins, and this was a good, ugly wm," head coach Mike Clark said Tuesday. Not all games are beautiful, and with the weather the way it was, and playing an 11 o'clock game after getting home at midnight the night before, the bell of the ball doesn't always look pretty.

"But it's a win - and a win is a win."

That it is, but K-State had anything but an easy time staving off the Terp rally.

Leading 8-5 through four innings, starting pitcher Chad Duckers hit a batter and gave up both a walk and a base hir, loading the bases. He momentarily recovered to strike out the next Terp batter, but Maryland's Jeremy Suarez hit a dribbler down the third base line that knocked in a run.

Then things began to unravel.

A passed ball by Duckers scored another Terp run. and Matt Swope's single to center scored one morealthough it easily could have been two if not for a good defensive play by the Cats.

K-State center fielder Nick Sorenson fielded Swope's base hit and gunned Suarez down at the plate, as he

But Clark had had enough, delving into his bullpen and with junior Tyson Helsel, who halted the Maryland charge by forcing a fly out to end the inning, with the scored knotted, 8-8

However, that tie was short lived. Despite retiring the first two batters in the top of the fifth, Terp pitcher Matt Basinger gave up a Sorensen base hit to get things started for K-State. The Cat junior proceeded to steal second, and after senior Josh Cavender walked, K-State had two men on for sophomore Pat Maloney. Maloney completed the two-out rally with a single to center field, scoring Sorenson and giving the Cats a.9-8

"I was looking for a good pitch to hit," Maloney said, "and I got my first pitch fastball - which was what I was looking for. I hit it up the middle, and luckily it got through, and Nick was fast enough to score. It was a big hit, and the rain started pouring after that."

After freshman Ty Soto struck out to end the inning. the umpires delayed the game due to the extensive

Later, senior Mark English would add a home run to left center in the bottom of the sixth, and senior Kelvin Day pitched a perfect final two innings to give K-State

"My arm's been sore for the past week, so I was just trying to throw strikes and let my defense do the work." said Day, who is suffering strained flexors in his left arm. "I had to come in and get heated and massaged so my arm wouldn't tighten up and I could go out that second

At any rate, though, Clark said he was pleased with tried to score from second base on the the Cats' offensive output, as K-State scored 10 or more runs in both games of the Maryland series.

"I thought offensively we did a real good job again," Clark said. "We're creating offense up and down our lineup. I think both teams were kind of asleep at the early, but it's nice to see the guys fight back."

Maryland took a 5-0 lead heading into the bottom of the second inning, but K-State used a six-run, five-hit, two-out rally to gain momentum.

'We scored all six of them with two outs," Clark said. "That's what was really nice to see. We bad quality at-bat after quality at-bat with two outs. That's something early in the season we weren't doing, and now we've got a little bit more confidence knowing we can create offense at

"We're getting a lot of baserunners on, and as long as you're getting a lot of baserunners on, they're going to find ways of scoring, whether they help you or you do it yourself. It's nice to see us these last two ball games really help ourselves and have key base hits at key times."

Jordan might return to NBA next season

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON , D.C. - The owner of the Washington Wizards said he has a gut feeling that Michael Jordan will return to the NBA next season.

In a story running on the front page of Tuesday's Washington Post, Wizards majority owner Abe Pollin said he believes the odds are that Jordan will play for the Wizards next season. Pollin said he does not know if Jordan has made up his mind yet.

"The odds are that he's going to come back," Pollin said. "I think he's going to decide whether he's going to be able to play at the level that is satisfying to him."

Jordan, a part-owner and president of basketball operations for Washington, consistently has said he's 99.9 percent sure he'll never play again.

He was unavailable for comment Monday night. Pollin said to the Post that he simply was stating his opinion. "What I said was my gut feeling." Pollin said. "It's his decision. I didn't think he'd come back when I first heard the talk. But when Mario Lemieux came back to the Penguins, it stirred something in Michael."

Lemieux, one of the owners of the Pittsburgh Penguins, returned to the ice in December after retiring at the end of the 1997 season and led the Penguins into the playoffs.

Pollin said he thinks Jordan, who won six NBA titles with the Chicago Bulls, is going through a self-examination of sorts. Jordan has been working out recently, including practicing with the Wizards.

K-State's senior wide receiver Brandon Clark always has shown loads of athletic talent. He can jump — Clark won the Kansas 5A

State high school long jump as a sophomore and a junior. He can run - he set the Valley Center High School records in the 200 meters and 400 meters and won state in the 300-meter hurdles and 400 meters as a senior. And he's big - standing 6 feet, 3 inches, 220 pounds.

Clark would seem to possess the ideal frame and talent sought for in a prototype wideout, except for one thing - injuries. As a senior in high school, Clark won the state 300-meter hurdles and 400 meters with a at K-State, he entered the season penciled in as the starting wide receiver, but ended up playing in just one game after hurting his foot again. Even last season, when he was healthy, those injuries still came back to haunt Clark.

"Last year, I was still dwelling on an injury or two, and I really didn't get to show myself," he said. "Once the season started, when we'd have team, I'd just go with the two's."

As a result, Clark finished the regular season with just four catches for 79 yards and one touchdown despite playing in all 13 games. Then, during the period between the Big 12 Championship and the Southwestern Cotton Bowl, Clark finally got the chance to prove himself.

"During the bowl prep, we had two or three weeks where everybody played a lot, and that actually helped my confidence out there," Clark said. "I got to show my coaches and show myself what I could do, and I think that's what helped out with my playing time in the Cotton Bowl.

At the Cotton Bowl, Clark filled in for Quincy Morgan, who was shaken up at the end of the first half. In Morgan's stead, Clark caught just one pass, but on that play, he turned what was just potential into performance. Quarterback Jonathan Beasley threw behind Clark on a crossing pattern, so the junior reached back and made a one-handed grab on the run.

Now, Clark is carrying that confidence to spring practice. His five years of toiling away behind the scenes are paying off.

"It's probably the first time everything's come to me," Clark said. "I know it all because I've been here so long, and I can actually have fun playing football now without thinking about it."

Fraternity member to bike across America this summer

Kansas State Collegian

Members of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity will continue a 13-year philanthropic tradition this summer by riding their bicycles 3,700 miles across the United States.

Every summer, 70 undergraduate members of the fraternity from across the country bicycle from San Francisco to Washington, D.C., on their annual Journey of Hope. The event is part of Pi Kap's national philanthropy, Push America. During the cross-country trek, members participate in events in local communities in order to promote an understanding of people with disabilities.

Sean McGivern, Pi Kap member, is the only man from the K-State chapter who will cycle across the country. McGivern, sophomore in political science, said each member of the team is responsible for raising a minimum of $4,000. He now has raised $3,900. McGivern said he has done a great deal of fund raising for the event.

"To raise money, I wrote about 400 letters to people. I solicited businesses, and now I'm soliciting sororities," he said. "For the sorority contest, I dropped buckets off at each house on campus, and for whoever ends up with the most money in their bucket, I will put a bumper sticker with their letters on my bicycle helmet for the trip."

Participants of Journey of Hope will spend their nights sleeping on church and school gymnasium floors. McGivern said he thinks the trip would be a challenge to all who participate.

"In terms of what greeks do to raise money for philanthropies, it's one of the most challenging events. Day in and day out, you get up at 7 a.m. and ride until about 4 p.m.," he said. To keep team members safe and hydrated, a crew will travel alongside the bikers. John Schalekamp, sophomore in mechanical engineering, was selected as a crew member for this summer. Schalekamp said he wanted to participate in Journey of Hope because of its mutual benefits.

"I thought that it would be a good experience for me and a great way to help people with disabilities," he said. "The thing that I am looking forward to the most this summer is being able to work with children with disabilities."

Journey of Hope raises over $300,000 for people with disabilities. McGivern said a portion of that money recently went toward the construction of a handicap-accessible playground at Frank Anneberg Park in Manhattan during Push America's annual Push Weekend.

McGivern said Push America is a beneficial philanthropy because it is directly tied to Pi Kap.

"It's affiliated with our fraternity. We have a say in what they do with every dollar we make through Push America," he said. "We make sure it gets put to good use in the communities that need it."

Matt Keller, junior in sociology, is a Pi Kap member who rode on the Journey of Hope during summer 2000. He described his experience as a worthwhile use of time.

"I applied for Journey of Hope last year, hoping to do something for somebody else for a change. I realized that sacrifice is more important than being self-centered and decided to give of my time and talent," he said.

He said his experience provided him with new friends and brother-

"I enjoyed meeting people every day and getting to be around people who hold no preconceived negative notions. The people that I dealt with just wanted a friend and someone to listen to them and hang out," he said.

McGivern said he looks forward to his ride this summer and is excited for the experiences he will encounter during his time on the road.

"There are some really special people that we'll meet. We'll get to show them that we're here for them,"

"It's not the disabilities that count. It's the abilities of people with disabilities."

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. - Rap star Eminem was sentenced to two years' probation Tuesday for carrying a concealed weapon.

The charge carried a maximum sentence of five years in prison, although Macomb County Prosecutor Carl Marlinga said earlier he would seek no more than six months because he has no record, and there was no serious injury.

As part of his probation, Macomb County Circuit Court Judge Antonio Viviano ordered the Grammy winner to undergo counseling and submit to drug testing. He will be allowed to travel within the continental United States for work.

"In this case, the weapon was not loaded, and there was no direct danger to human life," Viviano said, agreeing to accept a pre-sentencing report that recommended the rapper receive zero to three months in jail.

At the advice of his attorneys, Eminem made no statement in court. He silently stood between his attorneys in a dark suit and tie.

"Mr. Mathers is a self-made man. He has overcome many obstacles," his attorney, Wally Piszczatowski, told the judge before he handed down the sentence. "He has the ability to overcome this problem as a minor setback."

Eminem was charged following a June 4 confrontation outside a Warren nightclub. Police say Eminem struck a man he says he saw kissing his estranged wife, Kim Mathers.

Eminem, whose real name is Marshall Bruce Mathers III, pleaded guilty to the charge in February as part of an agreement with prosecutors who dropped a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon in return. Eminem could have changed his

While reading the latest edition of Sports Illustrated, I came across a quote that hit home.

"The world belongs to those who see its possibilities," columnist Steve Rushin said. "Dreaming is like believing in God or enrolling in the United frequent-flier program: It costs nothing, yet has potentially transcendent rewards."

Luckily, some kids with raw talent get the opportunity to make the most of their dreams in the big time. But for so many other kids like me, whose dramatic dreams of baseball fame started with makeshift bats and balls, I never did amount to too much on the

"We'd welcome him with open arms," Pollin said. "It's his decision. It would have to be in his interest to come back and he would not do it unless he could perform at the standard he set for himself.

"But it would be very exciting for everyone.

For Jordan to play again under NBA rules, he would have to divest his ownership interest in the Wizards - although he could find a caretaker to purchase his stake self it back to him when he stops playing.

"I am working out because I got up to 240 pounds, and I'm trying to lose weight," Jordan said last month. People are taking this stuff way too far, but I can't control what people write or think, so I'm not going to address this anymore."

Some of the speculation about his return has been fueled by Jordan's close friend, Charles Barkley, who has said he would like to play with Jordan in Washington next

And for the first time, Clark isn't thinking about injuries.

"I think I'm done with my injuries now. I just don't think about them," he said. "If they come, they come, but knowing that I'm healthy and I've been healthy for a while, it really helps, too, just playing out there and being full speed, physically.

"I've injured myself all through my lifetime. If you dwell on your injuries and worry about them, that's when they happen. So I just don't think about them. I just go out there and play football and have fun.

That new attitude also is paying dividends for the team. With the graduation of Morgan, the role of playmaker has fallen to Clark, and so far, he's lived up to the challenge, sophomore quarterback Ell Roberson said.

"Brandon is going to be a great player for us. He's real big, and he can run the slants and the picks and things just to get across the middle because he's so big, Roberson said. "He makes an easy target coming across the middle to catch the ball.

"I've seen Brandon go out and give a post move. He's just so big that he knows how to get around the corner. All you have to do is put to where he can catch it, he'll go up and get the ball. We go up to the line, and he says. 'Just throw the ball up, and I'll go up and get it." He can catch it over everybody."

Finally, after just looking on, Clark has the chance to stand out as a Cat.

"More than anytime, this is my time to step up," Clark said, "I've been ready for this. I've been ready for this the last three years."

Art in the shadows

Students showcase artwork in halls of West Stadium

STORY BY JJ DUNCAN PHOTOS BY KELLY GLASSCOCK

Walking through the dusty halls of West Stadium, the walls strewn with an entire exhibit of art, seems to have the effect of a carnival haunted house, filled with creatures and emotions purged onto canvas, ready to prey on passing viewers at any moment.

Working with what was available, Winston Branch, visiting professor of art, said he made a gallery out of the dim Branch said he filled the walls with pieces by people who have a passion for art for the "1+2" show.

The name of the show is derived from the fact that there is a mix in the levels of experience of the artists, ranging from first-year painters to graduate students.

The show is not based on merit or scholarship, and Branch said he made it that way to encourage students to create what they felt instead of creating what they thought the instructor wanted.

"It's not about scholarships or prizes," he said. "It's about students who have a real love for the art."

The show is made up of 21 students, most of whom have had Branch for an instructor.

Ben Branlund, junior in ceramics, has an untitled sculpture in the show. The piece is made of clay and looks like the crumbling shell of a person.

Branlund said he puts about four days of work into such pieces and creates them to be unhernic yet still able to laugh at the viewer.

encouragement sometimes helps out, Branlund said. While he never has been one of Branch's students, Branlund said he works in the room adjacent to the professor, who provides plenty of encourage-

"The most important thing I've heard him say is that it is important for an artist to relate to their peers," he said. "So instead of working with what a professor may have you deal with, you should create what you have dealt with yourself."

provides gives the artists a chance to express what is inside them, lack Hayes. senior in philosophy, said. The painting class Hayes took was a welcome break in his class schedule, he said.

To me, it's great that he's open to whatever we want to do," he said. "At first, there were no rules at all. He just wanted us to work like mad, and it was a liberating experience."

Without many opportunities to display in Manhattan, Yui Udo, graduate student in drawing, said the show provides an outlet for artists. Udo said Branch excites people about doing their own art which is what people need.

Energy and diversity from the students are seen in the pieces, Branch said. The fact that first year students' work is interspersed indistinguishably among the work of graduate students shows that all of the artists painted what was inside them, Branch said.

Branch said he encourages students to do the work they want, so they are more attached to the pieces.

"What I encourage all my students to do is find their own voice, their own rhythm, and explore it," he said. "I only give confidence to them more than teach them."

Konza Prairie subject of museum exhibit

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY Kansas State Collegian

Blazing fires of the Konza Prairie are captured in Larry Schwarm's famous photographs now being displayed at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and also have inspired the Create a Prairie Fire (with Art) family workshop.

This mixed-media event, taking place 7 p.m. Thursday at the Beach art museum, is part of the Arts Above the Arch public program. Anyone can attend at a cost of $2 per Every two weeks, the museum has some type of lecture, poetry reading, music or art program as a way to give patrons of all ages a place to explore their interests in the arts and also encourage family events, said Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor for the Beach art museum.

"The best way to understand art is to make it." Schlageck, event director, said. "These programs give the opportunity for shared family activities, something we lose while we're carting our kids to practice."

Fran Willbrant, associate controller for K-State, said she will attend the event with her five-year-old son as a good way

"He enjoys coloring and drawing, but this should introduce him to something a little more formal," Willbrant said.

The idea for this workshop. Schlageck said, was sparked from an artist chosen by the Friends of the Beach Museum 2001, Larry Schwarm. Schwarm is a professor at Emporia State University and an accomplished Kansas photographer.

He is known for capturing the magnificence of prairie fires. Schlageck said.

"Before we start creating, we will tour the exhibition of Larry's work and also look at the glass chandelier by Dale Chihuly that represents his interpretation of a prairie fire." she said.

Paint, tissue paper and sheets of mylar are only some of the supplies being offered for participants to use in their creations.

"Sharing different ideas about art is interesting to me, and I thought it would be fun to see what people could do after looking at other interpretations," Schlageck said.

Sarah Cochran, junior in public relations, is an employee of the Beach art museum and also is registered to participate.

"I love art that's your own, not something you buy," Cochran said. "The museum has materials to make some really cool collages." Schlageck said she thinks the program would be especially good for married students and their children, art majors and education majors, but Cochran said she just wants to do something different and meaningful.

"The workshops are generally geared toward kids," Cochran said. "But when it comes to art, I'm just a kid."

by using a project must be $87,075. The university will have several years to fulfill the terms of the agreement, as opposed to paying the fine immediately.

He said organizations pay that kind of amount to avoid problems in the future, as well as to show willingness to resolve concerns.

Other universities also have been fined recently because the Environmental Protection Agency has started to target colleges and universities for handling and storage of hazard materials on campus, Galitzer said.

The University of Nebraska, Iowa State University and the University of Kansas Medical School all have all been found in violation of EPA regulations.

"They are really cracking down on universities." Galitzer said. "They have been looking at industries all these years, and now they are turning their attention to campuses to how waste is handled."

Recently, the University of Hawaii was notified of a $1.7 million fee from the EPA, Galitzer said.

"It is a nationwide crackdown."
he said. "However, we have to look at how it will benefit the university.
This is going to be a positive thing for the K-State community."

The program will not affect student fees, Galitzer said.

"All the work will come out of our department, mostly," he said. "It will just mean we will have to increase our work load and do more. This will not affect the students financially."

MEMORIAL

In addition to this service, the time of the funeral has changed and now is at 11 a.m. Friday, instead of 1 p.m., at Scott's Methodist Church in Denver. The university is attempting to provide students who wish to carpool to the funeral with funding to do so. Those who are available to drive others or those who need a ride can contact the Office of Student Life at 532-6432 to be placed on a list.

Also, next week the university will sponsor a memorial service for Cobb, which will be at 7:30 p.m. either Wednesday or Thursday. Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, said the exact date of the service hasn't been established yet because he doesn't know when the family will be able to come to Manhattan.

Mayor Karen McCulloh said she hopes partnerships, perhaps with the school district to share buses, still will be considered as part of the plan to save expenses.

"I think it's very important to keep up our partnership with K-State," she said.

Snead said having the plan on hand makes a difference, whether it is put into practice right away or not.

In the case of Sgt. Guillermo

Vazquez faltered, a teammate caught the stretcher, and the two managed to struggle out of the mud without

Dropping the stretcher during the test would have meant the candidate would automatically be eliminated. In this test, there are no second chances.

"If an infantryman misses a target, they get another chance," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Mullis, who was evaluating Fort Riley's test. "If you have someone in cardiac arrest or who has a limb blown off, you have one shot. There are no retests."

The candidates must show proficiency in emergency medical care by treating several wounded platoon members while under fire. They must demonstrate survival skills, and day and night navigation. The final test is a 12-mile road march that must be completed in less than three hours while carrying equipment.

Many of the obstacles might be physically demanding, but the 100question test is what seems to wash out the most candidates, Carpenter said.

Vazquez's team, made up of Sgt. Carlos McCarroll, Spc. Troy Proctor and Spc. Benjamin Alexis, had taken the test before and said the test was what caused them the most problems. The soldiers all are with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 34 Armor.

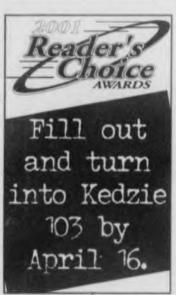

The soldiers said the badge sets soldiers apart from other medics.

Help with tax forms exists

By AMY MORGAN Kansas State Collegian

A postmark of April 16 is required to meet the filing deadline for all federal and state income taxes, and the city of Manhattan and K-State, have resources available for those who are filing.

Daralyn Gordon Arata, tax preparer for H&R Block, said she sees a lot of students coming in to get their taxes done. She said a lot of students have their taxes prepared by professionals or someone other than

"It is convenient, fairly inexpensive for a simple return, and we are very knowledgeable about the education credit,"

Arata said that for the first part of tax season, H&R Block worked on scheduled appointments, but now they are taking walk-in appointments, and on Saturday and Monday, appointments will be all walk-in.

The cost for filing income taxes at H&R Block depends on what forms a person needs, she said.

"We charge by form, so the more you have, the more expensive it will be," Arata said.

Arata said students who are filing, especially those preparing their own return, should see if their parents can claim them as a deduction; if they can, they should not claim themselves on their return. She said that is the biggest mistake she sees when students do their own return.

H&R Block will file returns electronically for clients if they choose, which is an efficient and effective method,

"It keeps you up to date, will notify us immediately if the return is accepted or rejected, and you get your refund back more quickly," Arata said.

She also said electronic filing helps reduce the chance that the Internal Revenue Service will lose the return.

Arata said she thinks it is worthwhile to file and many students are eligible for a refund, but they won't know until

K-State struggles with utility bills

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian

Temperatures in classrooms across campus are being kept at 78 degrees this spring.

The set temperature is part of a plan by K-State to keep utility costs low in the current fiscal year.

Ed Rice, director of facilities, said current estimates have the university about $1.5 million over budget for utilities this year, costs which Rice said has resulted from increased gas prices. The university is paying $4.75 per unit of gas.

"There is nothing you can do," he said. "It is no different than at your house or apartment."

Rice said K-State is in the process of bidding out next year's gas contract, and current market value is between $5.30 and $5.40 per unit of gas.

Escalating gas prices is a reason K-State has more stringent temperature levels than in the past. However, Rice said it can be difficult to keep temperatures at this level due to the age of some of K-State's buildings.

Rice said the problem is different than the temperature problems faced in classrooms during the winter, when rooms are sometimes considered too cold by students.

"In the winter, people can wear more clothing if they are cold, but in the springtime, sometimes you get to a point where you just can't take anything else off," Rice said. Students said the warm conditions in classes can make messages to Cobb in it.

Before the 6 p.m. service, guests were welcome to sign a guestbook

Around 6:15, the guests in attendance began a silent prayer walk through campus. Dwain Archer, director of fire inspection and public safety, led the walkers in a prayer in the Union Courtyard halfway through the walk.

"Simple prayers are answered, just like intellectual prayers," Archer said before the prayer.

Archer ended the prayer by urging those in attendance to remember Cobb's life, but also to move on with their own.

"That's what Drew would've wanted," he said, "He would've wanted us to move on."

After the walk, the participants returned to the chapel to listen to the United Black Voices, of which Cobb was a member. The choir sang a variety of hymns of praise as the audience shared their memories of

"I'm going to miss clowning around with Drew," Johnson said. "I loved to mess up his hair because he loved his hair so much."

Michong Kim. senior in family studies and human services, meanwhile, said she remembers Cobb as an affectionate friend.

"He always had a hug for me," Kim said. "He'd always hug me like we'd known each other for years, even though we didn't even know each other that well."

Telisa New, junior in mass communications and UBV member, said she agreed that Cobb was an affectionate. warm person.

"Drew always smiled," she said. "He was very polite and a great

The Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of Religious Activities, said that with Easter falling on Sunday, those who knew Drew or who were affected by his death can find comfort in religion and its messages.

"God is with us, and he's taken Drew on to another life," Fallon said. "There are new beginnings, and new life is coming. God is calling us to get on with life."

Cobb was born May 15, 1981, and he graduated from Kent Denver High School in 1999. He was a member of UBV for two years and is survived by his parents, Andrew and Gena Cobb, of Denver.

The funeral for Cobb will be at 11 a.m. Friday at Scott's Methodist Church in Denver. A universitysponsored memorial service is tentatively scheduled for 7:30 p.m. April 19, although the date is subject to

Strong winds cause power outages, damage in Manhattan

By APRIL MIDDLETON Kansas State Collegian

Two separate power outages caused by strong winds Wednesday afternoon affected approximately 3,400 KPL Gas Service customers in Manhattan.

Mike Faler, director of corporate and community relations, said the first outage resulted from a broken pole in the southeast part of the city. The outage occurred at 2 p.m. Power was restored to all affected customers by 2:45 p.m. Faler said the second outage, which occurred at 3 p.m., was the result of a primary conductor that was damaged in the Aggieville Business District.

The outage affected 2,150 customers. Power was restored to all but 80 of those affected by 3:45 p.m.

Faler said the remaining customers would receive power as soon as the conductor was put back up. He expected those repairs to have been completed by 5 p.m. Wednesday. Strong winds resulted in the loss of traffic lights throughout Manhattan, Faler said. Gusts traveled at 30 miles per hour, and there were straight winds of about 50 miles per hour. Sgt. Larry Freeby of the Riley County Police Department said patrol officers were on hand at five locations throughout the afternoon to help keep traffic flowing where there were Freeby said the majority of the traffic congestions were on Anderson Avenue, but officers were dispatched to other locations throughout the city.

One of K-State's most traveled areas recently has been subject to acts of vandalism.

Recent acts of vandalism in the newly renovated K-State Union Plaza, between the Union and Seaton Hall, have prompted student questions.

K-State Student Union Assistant Director Jack Connaughton said the incidents of vandalism have consisted of a broken light and people placing soap in the newly installed fountain outside of the Union.

In January, Quebec's health insurance board approved about $3,000 (USD) in payments for breast implants for a 15-year-old girl after a psychiatrist submitted a recommendation calling the surgery "necessary" for her mental health. Electricity provider asks state for rate increase TOPEKA - Public hearings were set to begin in Wichita on a requestfrom the state's largest electric utility to increase its rates $151 million.

Western Resources Inc. has asked state regulators to increase rates by $58 million for customers of its KGE subsidiary in Wichita and southeast Kansas and by $93 million for customers of its KPL unit in Topeka and northeast Kansas.

An alternative proposal, drafted by the Kansas Corporation Commission's staff, would cut KGE's rates by $92 million and raise KPL's rates $262,072. That proposal narrows the gap between what KGE customers pay in excess of what KPL customers are charged to about 8 percent from the current 25 percent.

The KCC expected the issue of making KGE and KPL rates equal to arise during Wednesday night's Wichita officials have requested equal rates, or "parity." Kansas Gas and Electric merged with Kansas Power and Light to form Western Resources in 1992.

The difference in rates is attributed to the $3 billion cost of building Wolf Creek nuclear power plant that Western and Topeka officials say benefits only KGE customers. Kansas Gas and Electric owned 47 percent of the plant before its merger with Kansas Power and Light.

John Frieden, an attorney for the city of Topeka, said KPL customers should not be asked to subsidize Wichita's rates.

Wichita Mayor Bob Knight said his city never has asked Topeka or other KPL customers for such help. Instead, Knight maintains Wolf Creek benefits all Western customers and equal rates are a matter of fairness.

Wichita and Topeka both agree that Western's rates could be lower.

"Western Resources keeps saying the rates are below the national average," Knight said. "What they are not telling you is the rates are higher than those in Nebraska, Missouri, Colorado and Oklahoma."

Store owner quits school, starts own Aggieville business

By JAMIE BARRETT

Kansas State Collegian

Sitting next to a hot pink wall lined with purple, blue, red and green wigs, Andrea Birdsell smiled from behind the cash register. For almost two years, the 21-year-old business woman has been the owner and sole employee of Deja Vu, a vintage clothing store in Aggieville.

Owning the store is simply what she has always wanted to do.

"I have always wanted to own a store," Birdsell said. "It has been a goal of mine for a long time."

Birdsell, originally from Kansas City, Mo., first got her inspiration to own a vintage clothing store from a Kansas City store, ReVue, she liked to shop at.

"I wanted to own a store in a college town, and I knew I wanted to get away from Kansas City," Birdsell said. "Lawrence had so much competition, so I decided to come to K-State. I didn't know anything about K-State when I came here."

Birdsell attended K-State first as a business major and then in fine arts for one year. When she decided she wasn't going to attend college any longer, she moved back to Kansas City, where she worked for ReVue as a dealer. Birdsell said that was the point when she realized she needed to open her own business.

"I decided to come back to Manhattan because with the time I was here, I saw the opportunity the Aggieville district presented," Birdsell said. "Manhaffan is not very diversified with their stores."

Birdsell began searching for the money to open her store when she was 19. She said the hardest part of opening her store was finding a bank that would loan money to such a young person.

"I was finally able to get a small personal loan from a bank in town," Birdsell said, "I had such a hard time because I was so young."

Once the store was opened, Birdsell said she got some strange responses from people in Manhattan. She said a lot of people thought her store was a thrift store, which bothered her.

"I don't get my clothes for free," Birdsell said. "There is a lot of work that goes into finding vintage clothing. I think a lot of people come to my store just for party clothes, but there is a small percentage of people that buy clothes from me because they actually wear them every day."

Birdsell said that since she has been operating Deja Vu. she has gained valuable experience and has learned a lot about being a business person.

"My passion is clothing." Birdsell said.
"I always want to be in the business, With Deja Vu, I have learned a lot but have had to sacrifice a lot, too."

While her store was getting on its feet, Birdsell said she was not even making enough money to rent an apartment, so she lived in the back of her store for a while. Once she established herself more, she was able to find an apartment, but still did not make enough with the store to have other employees beside herself.

"I lived in the store for over a year," Birdsell said. "I knew I had to get out of there, though. Aggieville is a hard place to sleep in, but I had to do what I had to do, and it was my goal to make this place

Expanding her store to more modern clothes is Birdsell's next goal.

"Everything I make right now is being put right back into the store." Birdsell said. "From owning the store, I have been able to see what the consumer wants, and I am willing to change to give them what they want. I want to have a slicker image and make people take my store seriously."

Birdsell's fiancee, Jeff Peterson, said Birdsell's passion is what has helped her keep Deja Vu open to change.

"She went for what she wanted at a very young age and because of that, she is able to have a lot of knowledge about what she wants to do in the future," Peterson said. "She is a really good fashion critic and is able to keep with the trends. That will keep her in the business for a long time."

Birdsell said she sees herself owning or managing stores long into the future.

"I don't want to stay in Kansas forever, but right now, what I am doing is just what I want to be doing," Birdsell said. "I am glad I did it at a young age, and I just want to keep doing better at it for a long time. This is my passion, and I always want to do this."

Chinese accept apology letter; Bush eager for return of crew

By CHRISTOPHER BODEEN

The Associated Press

HAIKOU, China — An airliner carrying 24 crew members of a U.S. spy plane detained for 12 days in China took off Thursday, ending a tense standoff after President Bush said the United States was "very sorry" for a Chinese pilot's death and the U.S. plane's landing without permission.

The chartered Continental Boeing 737 took off at about 7:30 a.m. local time from the civilian airport at Haikou, the capital of Hainan island. U.S. officials said the plane will take the crew to the U.S. territory of Guam and then Hawaii.

Hours earlier, the airliner left Guarn to retrieve the 21 men and three women, who landed their damaged U.S. Navy EP-3E on Haiman after colliding with a Chinese fighter jet on April 1 over the South China Sea.

The collision shattered the tail fir of the Chinese F-8 fighter, which spiraled out of control toward the sea. Chinese state media have said. The pilot, Wang Wei, was seen bailing out, but is missing and presumed dead. After announcing it would release the crew, the Chinese government said it would keep the surveillance plane until it could have more talks with the United States starting April 18.

The crew's release came after Bush agreed to say the United States was sorry for the Chinese pilot's death and the U.S. plane's landing without permission.

Wednesday's delicate, carefully worded compromise — characterized immediately by Chinese officials as an apology — capped days of tortuous linguistic negotiation over the release of the air crew and the in-flight collision that has threatened U.S.-China mlutions

It offered a tolerable way out for the governments of two powerful, deeply intertwined nations that, in public, had maintained intractable positions. The United States evaded the full apology demanded by China, which nevertheless extracted an intricate series of expressions of sorrow from Washington.

"This has been a difficult situation."

Foreign Minister Tang Jiaxuan said China had agreed to release the crew on "humanitarian grounds."

China's deputy U.N. ambassador, Shen Guofang, told The Associated Press that his country would keep the spy plane, which has been held on Hainan since April 1, pending further investigation. He declined to offer a timetable for the plane's return.

American officials assume Chinese experts have stripped the craft of its sophisticated surveillance equipment. Crew members worked to delete top-secret codes and intelligence before the Chinese came aboard, the Pentagon has said.

OK, either I am extremely tired of going to class, but I sweat I saw a herd of camel going to Kansas City.

Today's word of wisdom: playing with your cell phone in class is not cool.

I was just wondering when they are going to start charging students $4 for not using KATS. This is getting ridiculous.

Does anyone else think its ironic that I graduate in May and no one ever taught me how to fold these damn graduation invitations and I feel like a moron?

I attended the lecture at the Union on Tuesday night. It said it was a debate, a student debate and after roughly an hour and a half, we were not allowed to be in the Union room anymore, we had to continue the debate outside of the Union. Now if all of our tuition goes to such a thing, don't you think we should have access if we feel that we need to?

My tennis shoes stink so bad. I was just wondering can you take them to the dry cleaners and get them dry cleaned?

Please, Kansas State, raise privilege fees and tuition fees so we can have the air conditioning turned on early.

I just wanted to comment on David Levin's article today. It's nice to see some other left wingers in Kansas. And I think Bush is a jerk.

Four of the classes I am supposed to take I am on a wait list for. I hope nobody else has this problem. Well, it looks like another wasted semester.

It has been warm for three days. It hasn't even gotten hot yet. So stop whining about the air conditioning.

Hey, Keira Mann, I think it is kind of funny how in your article you talk about your few remaining moments here at K-State, yet you are only a sophomore.

Damn you people and your cell phones.

What kind of nitwits do they have running this school? First, most of all of my financial aid was deposited into the wrong account. Then Lafene was trying to charge me $200 for an appointment I never had and now the dorms won't turn on the AC because they can't pay the bill. What the hell is wrong with you people?

I am upset because the Kansas State Collegian did not put a picture of Drew Cobb in the paper yet. Why haven't you guys put a picture of him yet?

Unusual cheap massage in Manhattan borders on molestation

It sounded too good to be true,

The ad told of stress relief in the form of a massage at an extremely cheap price.

I found out the hard way that it was too good to

The journalist in me wanted to see if the massage was legit; the naive woman in me didn't ask obvious questions. What I am about to explain to you did happen. In fact, it even happened here in Manhatran.

When I arrived to receive my massage he offered to give me an even better deal. Instead of the 90 minute massage, he would give me 120 minutes for the same price. This seemed a little suspicious, but I agreed. I've received full body massages before, but none like this.

He had ulterior motives than just relieving my stress. Ulterior motives that made the massage end early.

Motives that made me feel helpless as I laid on the table and thought of my security measures, my mace and my cell phone, and how they were across the room. Motives that have left me dealing with sleep-

After I left, I went to the Riley County Police. Department and filed an information report.

However, there is little that the RCPD can do because of lack of laws in Kansas. He has not met the set elements of various crimes in order to be convicted. Detective Darla Gee said the massage cases dating back to 1998. Gee said every person who has filed a complaint has had similar characteristics and is in the same age group as me,

Gee said he not only advertises to do massages, but he also advertises to hire assistants. When males call for the position he said it has already been filled. Yet it is open when females call. And for some odd reason, he is too busy to make appointments with male clients. Yet he finds the time when females call.

Right now, I am on a mission to educate others about what is appropriate, and ultimately what is not, when receiving a massage. As Gee put it, the police department's hands are tied with this, but she said, "We need to take precautions and try to protect

First and foremost it is important to note that being a massage therapist can be a respectable position. However, there are some who are trying to

According to a Web site from the Massage Network, the average price for an hour of therapeutic massage is between $45 and $50 for an hour. This price can be lower if the person does not have much experience;

When it is dirt cheap, let's say under $20, that might alert you to

The above Web site also mentioned that massage therapy is not intended for sexual arousal; by either the person receiving or giving the massage. It states, "While MT involves the manipulation of soft tissue, it does not involve the clients or patient's private. parts. Private body parts should be covered by a sheet, a towel or by the client's clothes at all times." The site also mentions that "sexual behavior between client and massage therapist - physical or even verbal, or even by gestures only - is unaccept-

The kicker/ I received a European massage. Yet the massage therapists I spoke with had never even heard of such a massage. His idea of a European massage involved touching the groin area.

One thing that should never happen in a massage is the removal of towels. Janet Inlow, owner of Advanced Massage Matters in Wichita, said. I wasn't even given a towel to begin with. And later, when 1 had one placed over my private parts, he would move it around in a way which exposed me, despite my efforts to keep it in place.

Inlow said there are some things that a potential client should ask before they agree to receive a massage. She said the most important thing to do is check out the facility prior to the massage. Also, ask for references, experience and training. Look for certificates that have official seals along with accred-

At the place I went to the man had certificates on his wall, but I found out later that he was not a certified massage therapist. I also found out that I am not the only one who has complained about this freat-Currently in Kansas you do not have to be certified in order to be a massage therapist, but they are trying to work on making that mandatory at the state level. Inlow said this would not necessarily ensure that all of those who are certified are actually good at

The bottom line is that massage can be a wonderful experience. It can help reduce stress and relieve muscle tension. But it can be extremely scary if you are not careful about who you let massage you.

This has been an extremely difficult column for

I made mistakes the day I received my 'massage.' Mistakes such as not asking for references and being too trustworthy. But regardless of being too naive, I did not deserve to be treated the way that I was. Learn from my experience. Please let me be the only one who loses sleep from this at night. Let me be the only one who is helpless.

I paid for a massage. I didn't pay to be molested.

Gray skies clear up as captives come home

You've been reading the paper. It's been a truly lousy week, all the way across the board. It's been alternately hectic or just plain depressing. I think the weather getting soggy and dreary was just a reflection of my inner self. Sorry to rain on y'all.

It's been dreary enough that my secondary defense mechanism has acted up again - I mock, and I mock hard. (My primary defense mechanism, well, is deadly, vicious and leaves nothing but the sweet scent of Maine pines.)

I'm saving it for the next person who knocks on my door during my precious four-hour sleep

window to talk

serious events the gravity which bogs medown. Doesn't make me very good company because my irreverence gets a little, erm, obnoxious. And I don't want to offend anymore people than I have to.

So I was quite pleased to hear that the American flight crew of a damaged spy plane is getting a ride home. Because even I can't mock our troops being held by a foreign power, or the asinine nationalistic stupidity that caused the political quagmire in the first place.

With their release imminent, however, it does suddenly strike me how ridiculous the entire ordeal has been.

At one point a Chinese official called the plane's landing on Chinese soil an "invasion." Mmm, frightening, a crew made up mostly of naval cryptologists seeking to ... do ... what? It's like waking up and finding the math club exemplary, as evidenced by the fact that they landed the damaged craft to begin with. I'm not insinuating that they are, to any degree, less than excellent at their military specialties. Just that if the CIA were to sponsor a covert incursion into China. they'd probably send, oh, a special operations group of personnel trained in shooting people and not the Divided-by-Pi Brigade wearing quadratic-formula camoflague and beating their foes senseless with slide rules. "I'll show you how to carry the one!" "whap"] Wow. A mammoth parenthetical aside.

And, while I'm on the issue, let's not completely diss the math club, either. I'm certain they have mad skills and are probably the secret gods of this city. Yes, I see them piling into a cargo plane with President Ion Wefald in fatigues playing Lee Marvin, herding them in one by one with a guttural, "What, you wanna live forever? The integral of 'life' is approaching zero, you maggots! Move it! Shout out your prime numbers! Let's move, troops! One-two-three-four, I love Never, ever fall asleep with your face in a calc book, that's all I gotta say. Did it 11 years ago and I think my DNA's scarred.

Anyhow. My political allegiance is still undecided. I would've been a die-hard George W. Bush fan for life if he'd come out and announced in the Rose Garden, "Yeah, we're sorry - we're sorry your pilot sheared off the nose of our plane in international skies, we're sorry our crew managed not to turn themselves into a gray smear, we're and stalked off angrily.

I'd like to have seen Dick Cheney do it, but only if he pulled a Redd Foxx and clasped his chest and sunk gasping into a flowerbed, then stood up, brushed himself > off and trotted off smirking and whistling. I'd be a Kennedy fan if Edward Kennedy read every sentence of the apology letter between Jell-O shots. It's all in the delivery.

But civility prevailed. Sabres were rattled - but they got into the playoffs, with Dominik Hasek in goal ... wait, wait, geopolitics, not the Stanley Cup, gotcha, sorry, attention span, you know, Sorry.

Anyhow, diplomatic curtains were ruffled. Many heads talked on daytime TV. And the Bush administration lumbered forward on its ambitious "let's settle for not blowing up the world first thing today" agenda, and patience and simple determination (oh, and imminent American arms sales to Taiwan and China's need to exert influence to kibosh as much of the deal as possible) paid off. Good enough.

At this writing, I'm certain we don't know all the repercussions of this diplomatic nightmare, but I can allow myself to be giddy. If that crew's coming home, then I can breathe much easier. I can joke once it's shifted into "park." I'm still saddened that there was a collision and one Chinese pilot to begin with, but we can't bring him home, and we would, if we could. We can dwell on it or we can move beyond this. And the skies will part, and the rain will stop, and life will go on again.

And that's reason enough to laugh.

New superintendent chosen for Manhattan school district

By APRIL MIDDLETON

Kansas State Collegian

An almost one-year vacancy was filled Wednesday morning with the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board's announcement that a District Superintendent was hired.

Sharol Little accepted the terms of the district's contract. The contract was signed and faxed Wednesday morning. The board accepted it after a five-minute executive session.

Little will assume her position as superintendent July 1. Interim Superintendent Tom Hawk's contract expires June 30.

Helen Petrik, clerk of the board of education, said the board had set a time line in the beginning of the search for a superintendent. She said they have followed that time line closely.

"The board had initially looked to make a decision by last week," Petrik said. "After that, they had to go through the process of offering the job and drawing up a contract."

Little is now the superintendent in Dodge City, Kan. She submitted her resignation from the Dodge City School District during its Monday board meeting, and it was accepted Tuesday.

Little has been Dodge City superintendent for four years. Prior to her current position, she served as superintendent in Winfield, Kan., and she was the assistant superintendent in Hutchinson, Kan., and Liberal, Kan.

She has a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in education from Fort Hays State University and a doctoral degree from K-State.

The superintendent position has been vacant since June of last year when Dan Yunk resigned. Hawk has served as interim superintendent since that time.

Phillip Morris lobbying efforts under scrutiny

Company supports FDA tobacco authority instead of various state, local laws.

By NANCY ZUCKERBROD The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Philip Morris Inc. has talked to dozens of lawmakers in a lobbying campaign to persuade Congress to give the government new authority to regulate tobacco. Health advocates say they're wary of the about-face by the nation's largest cigarette manufacturer.

"I just would say our approach as we have talked to members of Congress is that we understand there is some skepticism, but we are committed to trying to do this," Philip Morris Senior Vice President Steven Parrish said Wednesday.

It was Parrish who announced a year ago that Philip Morris would support regulation by the Food and Drug Administration. Soon after, the Supreme Court ruled FDA needs the permission of Congress to do that, which prompted the lobbying effort on what Parrish said is the company's No. 1 priority.

Tommy Thompson, Health and Human Services secretary, supports regulation, but the Bush administration has not proposed legislation.

Health advocates also want regulation but are skeptical of Philip Morris. Paul Billings, a lobbyist for the American Lung Association, called the company's actions clever and troubling.

Billings believes Philip Morris' goal is to improve its image while doing all it can to see that rules are written to its liking. He described as inadequate a 14-page document, called "FDA and Tobacco," that Philip Morris has been distributing on Capitol Hill.

When asked, most other tobacco companies say they support sensible FDA regulation, but Capitol Hill staffers say the other manufacturers are lobbying against it.

"Philip Morris is the only company at this point that supports this," said Daniel Groves, chief of staff to Rep. Ernie Fletcher, a Republican from a tobacco-growing district in Kentucky. The congressman, like most tobacco-state lawmakers, has refused to endorse FDA regulation.

Philip Morris is not lobbying only allies. The company also is targeting tobacco foes such as Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., with whom company representatives met.

"It was a very unusual meeting," Durbin said. "After spending all of my congressional career at war with the tobacco companies, I was literally sitting down with the enemy.

"What I told them was if they were going to work in good faith for FDA regulation, which would reduce sales to children and increase warnings to consumers, I would be willing to work with them."

Philip Morris, which makes half the cigarettes sold in America, is a major player in Washington. In the last election, the company donated about $3.6 million to federal candidates and political parties.

Parrish said it makes sense from a business standpoint to press for regulation, because federal oversight could prevent the industry from having to abide by various state and local laws that could otherwise come

"FDA and Tobacco" is more detailed than any previous document the company has distributed. It says FDA should regulate the manufacture of cigarettes and ingredients added to

Injury guides athlete to tennis career

Tennis hasn't always been Alena Jecminkova's sport. In fact, her parents got her started skiing at a very young age, conquering the slopes of the Jeseniky Mountains two hours outside her hometown of Olomouc, Czech Republic. But an accident in 1985 changed things for the K-State

At age 6, a skiing injury left Jecminkova with a broken leg-

She began playing tennis.

By age 14, though, Jecminkova was forced to choose between the two sports.

"I decided for tennis, and I think it was a good choice to me," she said.

Was it ever.

Jecminkova, the Wildcats' No. I singles player, leads the team with 19 singles wins during her junior campaign, following a team-high 23 match victories as a sophomore.

Last year, she became only the third player in K-State history to qualify for the NCAAs (and the youngest to do it), while being named the 2000 Intercollegiate Tennis Association Central Region's Player to Watch. She also was a 2000 All-Big 12 singles selection, as well as the No. 2 singles runner-up in the Most recently, lecrninková was awarded Big 12 Player of the Week Honors on April 4, after gamering decisive singles and doubles victories over both Colorado and Nebraska.

But things haven't always been so easy for the 5-foot-9

Not even a month after Jecminkova's arrival in Manhattan in fall 1998, she suffered a severe ankle injury in late August. "I couldn't practice at all the fall semester," she said, "and ien I had surgery and I was trying to recover from it. I didn't play too many matches in the spring semester, and it definitely was a big difference. It wasn't a very good year."

Yet, it was the way Jecminkova learned from that injury that helped her develop into the player she is today, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"Part of it was getting healthy, but the other part was learning how to handle it better when she's not healthy or when things aren't perfect. I think a lot of athletes, maybe most athletes, like things to be perfect and like things to be sort of set up with them.

"Learning that most of the time that's not going to be case and learning to get yourself to perform at a good level in the face of some of the difficulties that come up routinely is just part of the process of becoming a more mature player. And I think that's really what Alena has

Now that he's done it all, it's time for Tiger to retire

MICHAEL NOLL

Congratulations Tiger Woods. It's official you're the best golfer of all time.

After winning the Masters and claiming possession, for the first time in history, all four major championships simultaneously, you have proven that you're certainly in a league of YOUR OWIL

So quit. Retire. Get out. We don't want you

America is sick and fired of Tiger Woods. Ignore all the magazine covers and huge promotion bucks. We really don't ever want to see your mug on TV again. Take a lesson from Michael Jordan's decision several years ago and retire while at the top of your game. Go play basketball or baseball or hockey, anything

Oh sure, it sounds harsh telling the man credited with giving golf a whole new fan base, with reviving a game that was, until Woods arrival, played by stodgy old men in plaid pants. Woods made golf cool.

Now we're tired of it.

Watching golf tournaments is about as exciting as watching little kid soccer. One player is in front dribbling the ball while the rest of the kids follow in a pack.

There's no suspense in golf anymore. The only question is whether Woods will pump his right fist after holing a putt or ... Never mind, he always does that.

Tiger does everything the same. He always dresses well. He always gives a frowny look of consternation after hitting a less than absolutely perfect shot. He always starts out tournaments several places out of first, but he always wins - always - and it's boring. People don't want to see perfect golf. They want to build their own self-esteem by seeing really ugly/funny golf. That's why Leslie Nielson's "Bad Golf My Way" book and video has sold well. That's why Chi Chi Rodriguez was popular. He didn't win, but he did cut a pretty smooth Zorro swath with his putter. The same's true for Bill Murray. More people can quote "Caddyshack" than name the last four Masters' champions.

Woods is no Cinderella story. He isn't going to make a model groundhog out of plastic explosive, and he sure isn't going to play 18 holes with Rodney Dangerfield.

In short, Tiger isn't fun, and even worse, he doesn't do anything to make people cheer for

When the Olympics take place, nobody cheers for the Norwegian ski jumpers, the German bobsledders or the Kenyan long distance runners. No, they root for the Jamaican bobsled team and the swimmer who had to fight through personal illness, family tragedy and the death of her favorite dog. The people favored to win the gold aren't popular.

Of course, there's the fairweather fans who jump on the first bandwagon they can - the people with the Tiger Woods polo shirts, the Yankees hats, the Lakers tear-away pants and the Jordan shoes.

They will continue to cheer for Tiger as long as he's winning, but at the first sign of weakness, they will be gone. Then, Tiger won't have anybody backing him.

The fairweather fans will have moved on and those who had already grown tired of his perfection will have found an underdog to root for. In short, Tiger will be a very lonely man.

It's better that he retire now, so everyone. will remember him for not only his talent but his mystique. When Jordan retired, his publicity and popularity only grew. The same would be true for Tiger. Plus, all those golfers in the trailing pack could finally have a chance to gain recognition.

The game of golf would be saved if Tiger quit now, but that's no reason for Woods to give up the game altogether. He could always become a greenskeeper at some remote. country club and then make a surprising comeback years later.

I can hear Bill Murray calling the final hole

"This crowd has grown deadly silent, a Cinderella story outta' nowhere. Former greenskeeper and now about to become the masters champion.

"Cinderella story ... and he got all of that one."

Give it some thought. Tiger.

Golfers take 4th

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's golf team placed fourth at the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic in Norman, Okla., by shooting the best all-time 54hole score in K-State history.

The Cats shot rounds of 302, 300 and 312 for a final score of 914 to break to previous record of 926 set on Sept. 8-9, 1997.

"It's a pretty big breakthrough for us," coach Kristi Knight said. "The team knows they can shoot that kind of a total, and those are the kind of totals that it takes these days in women's college golf to be competitive, not only in the conference but in any tournament you go

Leading the way for K-State were senior Carrie Chambers. freshman Christine Boucher and sophomore Miranda Smith, all of whom finished in the top 15.

The tournament was especially sweet for Chambers, who returned to her native Oklahoma for the last time in her career and finished

"It was a good feeling for my senior year, to go back there and be able to play well." Chambers said. "I think everybody likes to play well in their home state. I was happy that I was able to do it."

In order to place in the top 10, though. Chambers had to shoot a career-best 71 in the final round, which was especially tough considering how she had struggled to finish tournaments earlier in the season.

"I think I just kept it together. I've had troubles this year trying to close out a round. On the 36-hole day, in that round I was two under through 12 or 13 holes and ended up shooting a 75. That's kind of been how it's happened all year," she said. "I've had kind of a bad of my round that's kind of hurt me, and I think the 71, I was able to finish well."

Such a quality top-to-bottom performance was especially important after the team's last tournament. At the Baylor/Iowa State shootout in San Antonio two weeks ago, K-State, after placing third after the first day, dropped 17 shots in its second round to finish seventh.

"I think it was really important for them to bounce back after that final round in San Antonio. We'd been doing pretty good all year, and we hadn't really blown up and had a bad round," Knight said. "That final day at San Antonio, we flat out played bad. They were pretty disappointed about that."

When the team prepared to leave for Oklahoma Saturday morning, though, its chances of improving upon that performance took a hit. Edie Murdoch came down from a severe cold that aggravated her asthma, so Knight decided at 8:45 Saturday morning that the junior wouldn't make the Knight, however, wasn't worried about the loss, or Murdoch's replacement, sophomore Morgan Hagler.

"Edie's been a consistent player for us all year. We didn't talk about it as a team, it didn't worry me," Knight said. "I just kind of knew the team would step up and be okay, and I knew that Morgan was capable of holding her own."

Once at the tournament, Boucher immediately started off right, shooting a first-round 69. She wouldn't be able to sustain that play in the third round, however, as nagging lower back pain became more severe and dropped her score

"It was amazing that she even played 18 holes. Her back hurt so bad," Knight said.

"She battled all day. It was a struggle for her."

K-State will play in its final regular-season tournament of the year on April 23-25 at the Big 12 Championship in Rhodes, Iowa. A berth in the regional championships will be on the line.

DJ Aturnie (Ernie Saville, senior in kinesiology), enjoys playing at parties and helping people have a good time through music. Below: Live DJ-ing still is an important and real part of Saville's and Mertz's lives. They continue to play parties, and the show, Elements of Sound, recently found a new home at Safari Jack's Watering Hole.

lements of Sound is challenging the idea that all good things must come to an end.

When Elements of Taste closed its doors last month, fans of Elements of Sound, the club's popular electronica show featuring live disc jockeys, feared the party was over. Not so.

DJ Atumie, (Ernie Saville, senior in kinesiology), and n.9 (Adam Mertz), are in the process of immortalizing some of the Elements experience.

"It was a really good six months we had over at Elements," Saville said. "If you didn't make it, you missed a really good time, a little bit of culture in this town that is lacking." For those who missed it or for those who forever want a piece of the show, the two are releasing a double compact disc set, titled "Elements of Sound: The Periodic Table." The set will contain music that is representative of the show, Saville said.

"Some tracks are what I actually played at Elements," he said. "I chose ones that the crowd really got into and enjoyed."

What the crowd enjoyed was a blend of DJ Aturnie's trance and n.9's techno music. Stylistically, Saville said, the music he and Mertz play is different, but the sound elements are intrinsically related.

"Trance and techno have roots within each other," he said. "If you break some of the trance songs down into their minimal components, it would be techno."

Mertz further explained differences in the music "Techno sometimes has no melodies, just beats," he said. "It has a harder sound."

Elements of Taste opened its doors to the sounds of the DJs, and it was a bit of an experiment for all of those involved.

"Elements was the first real club in this town," Saville said, "so we tried our best to bring in various genres of all kinds of DIs all the time to keep it fresh."

The CDs will represent this eclectic mix from the club, but also are influenced by the DJs' experiences. Both Saville and Mertz have been playing parties and raves for about six years. When Mertz began playing at Elements, he said he had to adjust his playing.

"Raves are where I got my start," Mertz said. "For club DI-ing, like at Elements, I have to adjust to the different type of crowd. I like to play fast and hard, but at a club I notice people are drunk and getting tired, so I slow it down."

What he slows down is the bpm, or beats per minute, of the songs. Essentially, what a DJ does is match the beats, melodies and changes of one record to another. DIs control the speed of the first record and cue up a second record to match it. The goal is to create a fluid sound with minimal traces of mixing. When obvious mixing occurs, it's called a train wreck, which, according to Mertz, can taint a DFs career.

There are ways to reduce these awkward musical collisions of sound.

"Dis need to know their records backwards and forwards," Mertz said. "Songs usually follow a certain pattern, and you start to recognize or feel the changes coming."

Years of practice have increased both Saville's and Mertz's skill levels. Both have played nationally, as well as across the region.

"Just last summer I DJ-ed in Chicago and San Francisco," Mertz said, "and then when the Elements show started. I liked that so much that I didn't pursue

It was when Saville began some of his bigger shows that he decided DJ-ing would be a lifetime

"I played shows around here, and then after I turned 21. I got to start going to bigger clubs in places like Chicago and New York City," Saville said. "It was right then and there that I knew this was exactly what I wanted to do. Simple as that."

Live DI-ing still is an important and real part of Saville's and Mertz's lives. They continue to play parties, and Elements of Sound recently has found a new home at Safari Jack's Watering Hole. The move has taken some getting used to, Saville said, but said he expects the Friday night show to pick up.

"It takes a while to establish," he said. "Once we can get through the weather and get onto the back patio, it will only get better."

Aaron Brooks, entertainment director at Safari Jack's, said he's excited to have the DJs there. Brooks worked with Saville in setting up sound equipment when Safari Jack's opened. Brooks said he believes much of the show's appeal comes from its fluidness.

Throughout the whole night, it's like one ongoing vibe," he said. "They're taking two separate pieces of music and blending them together into one thing that's always moving."

That same feel can be found on the double CD set, available within the next couple of weeks.

"I hope people check it out," Saville said. "I know people ask for n.9 by name. If people can't make it to our show, here's a chance to pop something into the CD player and go."

Nevertheless, letting her play do the talking might be one of Jecminkova's finest characteristics, Bietau said.

"I don't think there's any question about it," he said. "There are different learning styles, but I think most athletes, when they see what it is they would like to be doing being done in front of them, are probably influenced by that in a stronger way than any other thing."

Of course, at 22, Jecminkova has the luxury of many years of tennis under her belt - which makes any kind of transition that much easier, she said.

Plus, natural talent never hurts either, said Dinah Watson, K-State assistant coach and former player (1995-98)."With her talent and a good

Nonetheless, Bietau said he's thankful Jecminkova chose tennis over skiing eight years ago

The following is information collected from national studies of college students:

One in four college women have either been raped or suffered attempted rape.

57 percent of the rapes occurred on a date.
Women aged 16-24 have four times higher risk of being raped than any other population group.

Only 27 percent of women whose sexual assaults met the legal definition of rape thought of themselves as being rape victims.

One in 12 male students surveyed had committed acts that met the legal definition of

"No. No. No. no, no," echoed throughout the second-floor hallway of Holton Hall on Tuesday evening as women gathered to learn self-defense techniques and share rape myths and facts.

Gina and Mina Grutzmacher, along with 10 other women, kicked, punched and shouted at a punching bag as they learned how to respond if ever they were attacked.

Gina Grutzmacher, freshman in accounting, and Mina, her mother, who lives in Westmoreland, Kan., said they decided to take the free self-defense course sponsored by K-State Women's Center after some of Mina's co-workers had spoken enthusiastically about self-defense.

"At my office, some of my co-workers had had a presentation by someone who did Tae Kwan Do," Mina said. "I've also gotten a lot of e-mails about rapes and attacks. I told Gina if there was anything going on, to sign us up."

There are six one-hour sessions in the workshop. The first 30 minutes of the hour-long session on Tuesday night were devoted to learning physical moves to use against attackers. The women sat in a circle and discussed revealing statistics about date rape for the latter half-hour.

"Our big thing is giving women confidence to know that they control these things and their lives, and I think most of them are learning that," said Julie Falco, junior in social work and one of the two

As the women performed punches, kicks behind, forward kicks and side stompings, they were required to yell "no."

"We yell 'no' a lot just to get the idea that our voices are one of the best weapons we have," said Michelle Roddy, junior in speech and women's studies and one of the session's instructors.

When it comes to physical weapons, such as punches and kicks, Roddy said

Mina has a lot of skill.

"Mina is a badass," she said. "She hits the bag so hard that it makes me fall back."

After perfecting their physical techniques, the women shared their names, hometowns and interesting things about themselves.

"It's easier for us to get closer if we know each other," Falco said.

Indeed, the women did Jearn more about each other as some shared personal stories of close-call situations and rapes, where either they, or someone they knew, had been the victim.

3 K-State students awarded Goldwater

By THERESA BECKER Kansas State Collegian

Three K-State students were awarded the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship, putting the university at second place nationally, tied with Harvard.

Elizabeth Richardson, sophomore in biology and political science; Dawn Dechand, senior in biological and agricultural engineering-environmental; and Trevor Fast, senior in math and statistics, were awarded the scholarship that is designed to foster research in the areas of math. science and engineering.

Fast said he's glad to finally know his efforts have paid off. "I was relieved to finally find out. It was a long process," he said. Fast, whose research involves analyzing certain properties of different space times which would relate to the structure of the universe, credits his research adviser for keeping him focused.

"Dr. David Auckly has spent many hours working with me on the project. He keeps challenging problems on the table. I'm never without something to do," Fast

All three students have been involved with research on campus, working alongside faculty members.

James Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said faculty members help students start researching at the undergraduate level.

"A lot of students, thanks to faculty, get involved in research in their field early in their careers," Hohenbary said.

The application process is a long one, as it starts with nominations at the campus level, Hohenbary said.

After a student has been awarded a campus nomination, they have several months to revise and rewrite the application and essay. The Goldwater Foundation announces the winners in late March or early April.

The scholarship was established in 1989 to honor Barry M. Goldwater, a prominent statesman who served in the senate for 30 years. It awards around 300 scholarships a year, at $7,500 each, according to the Goldwater Foundation Web site. It is designed to allow students to continue their research at the post-graduate level.

Only Princeton University ranks above K-State and Harvard for national winners.

Markers, yarn, scissors and paint were only a few of the art supplies K-State students and Manhattan residents were able to choose from Thursday to set prairies on fire.

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art presented a family workshop titled "Create a Prairie Fire with Art" as part of the museum's Art Above the

Before creating their own art, participants were able to learn about the importance of prairie fires while viewing selected pieces of artwork on display in the museum. The workshop allowed participants to see how other artists have portrayed prairie fires in realistic photographs and abstract paintings.

The workshop also provided the opportunity for participants to use different techniques and supplies to create their own prairie fire art.

"I think it is good for kids to learn about different kinds of art and I thought it would be a fun family activity," said Fran Willbrant, associate controller for K-State.

International students share views about China standoff

By JENNIFER O'NEILL

The 11-day standoff between the United States and China has ended, and while many Americans might have supported President Bush's handling of the situation, some international students share a different view.

Members of the Chinese Student and Scholar Association have expressed their

"I think the U.S. was responsible for the collision of the two planes," said Yu Chen, graduate teaching assistant in computing and information science. "It might not have been an intentional act, but our plane went down because of it."

Chen came to K-State last August from his home in Jan Ning, China.

Haipeng Guo, graduate research assistant in computing and information science and president of the association, is originally from Beijing. He has been a student at K-State since 1999.

"I think the U.S. is wrong in sending spy planes to other countries," he said.

Guo also said he thinks the crew members of the U.S. spy plane made a mistake by not informing China that they needed to make an emergency landing and get their permission.

"I think that Bush should have been more sensitive from the beginning," he said. Though both students agreed the United States owed China a formal apology, they were also glad that China released the American crew.

"I'm very happy about this," Chen said. "It was only a matter of time."

Zhanshan Dong, graduate research assistant in agronomy and vice president of the association, said returning the crew is a step in the right direction.

"This is good news for everyone," he

The Chinese government released the U.S. crew after it received a letter from Joseph Prueher, U.S. Ambassador, stating the U.S. was "very sorry" for the loss of the Chinese pilot and for landing on Chinese soil without verbal clearance.

The question still remains of the shaky relationship between China and the U.S..

Guo and Chen both said relations between China and the U.S. will probably suffer a major strain.

According to U.S. officials, the situation hasn't been entirely resolved. China officials said they want the U.S. to put an end to missions over international waters near

U.S. officials said it has no intention of ending flights in those international flight

Chen said this situation makes an already stressed relationship more tense, but after all the issues are resolved, he said he thinks China and the United States will be better prepared for future problems.

"I think it could possibly destroy relations between the two countries to some degree, but I think everything will be resolved eventually," Guo said.

These students are hopeful of a happy ending, which has begun with the return of American soldiers, but there sill exists the matter of trade.

Q: What are the biking regulations on campus? I want to ride my bike on campus, but I have never done it before and do not want to get ticketed.

A: Bicycles on campus must have permits, just like cars. Bicyclists are also restricted from riding on campus lawns or planted areas, and riding on campus walkways is prohibited Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. You can find more information on how to obtain a permit, regulations and the bike map at www.ksu.edu/parking/bikeregs.

Graves considers plan to bolster tax collection

TOPEKA - Gov. Bill Graves and legislators are expected to step up the collection of delinquent taxes because news about the state budget has grown worse.

Budget Director Duane Goossen said Thursday that Graves is considering plans to beef up the Department of Revenue's collection staff during the state's 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1. The department believes spending $3 million on new staff could lead to an extra $40 million in tax collections in fiscal 2002, Goossen said.

Legislators would need the money, a possible net gain of $37 million. New estimates for social service caseloads will require them to set aside an extra $19.9 million for medical service, cash assistance and foster care programs over the next 15 months.

Those extra costs widened a budget gap to $205 million. The gap is the difference between spending already approved, or to which the state is committed, and the revenues the state is expected to collect.

When the Legislature reconvenes April 25, members must balance spending for the state's 2001 and 2002 fiscal years with the latest revenue figures.

McVeigh execution to be televised on closed circuit

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Survivors and relatives of the Oklahoma City bombing victims will be allowed to watch Timothy McVeigh's execution on closed-circuit television. Attorney General John Ashcroft said he wanted to help them "close this chapter of their lives.

"The Oklahoma City survivors may be the largest group of crime victims in our history," Ashcroft said Thursday. "The Department of Justice must make special provisions to assist the needs of the survivors and the victims' families.

Ashcroft also said he would allow two additional public witnesses beyond the eight already cleared for watching the execution firsthand on May 16 at a federal penitentiary in Terre Haute, Ind.

The attorney general also said the Justice Department and the Bureau of Prisons would work closely with the FBI to thwart any attempts to record or pirate the closed-circuit broadcast.

Ashcroft said he determined that the broadcast should be permitted after meeting this week in Oklahoma City with some 100 victims or relatives of victims of the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building there.

Slaughter of livestock touted to end outbreak

WASHINGTON, D.C. - British scientists say a greatly expanded program of livestock slaughter will be the only effective way to stop the spread of foot-and-mouth disease among farm animals in England.

In a study appearing Friday in the journal Science, researchers at the Imperial College School of Medicine in London called for a policy of "ring culling," a system in which all livestock within about a mile of an infected animal are killed.

"Extensive culling is sadly the only option for controlling the current British epidemic and it is essential that the control measures now in place are maintained during the long decay phase of the epidemic to ensure eradication," the authors write in Science.

The authors are Neil Ferguson, Christl Donnelly and Roy Anderson. all researchers in the department of infectious disease epidemiology at the St. Mary's campus of the Imperial College School of Medicine.

An outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, a highly infectious disease that affects cows, horses, sheep and pigs, developed in Britain seven weeks ago, starting with a pig herd in Northumberland. It since has affected cows and sheep. The disease also has been reported in France, Ireland and the Netherlands. The disease does not affect humans. - The Associated Press

Denise Clark, breath alcohol technician, runs breath and urine-analysis testing out of a RV that she and her husband bought. Her husband, Dick Clark, installed a bathroom so that the unit would be mobile. Tests are run for local businesses within a 30-mile radius.

Konza Lab Connection Inc. was founded in November 2000 through a combination of Denise Clark's extensive background in medical lab work and Dick Clark's immyative marketing ideas and mattrance expertise. Through the comple's combined talents, a business was born that now caters to a growing need in the workplaces of America employee drug and alcohol testing.

The Clarks are contracted with number of businesses and organizations in and around Manhattan, including K-State and Merry Health Center Inc.

They perform drug tests before a person's employment, after an accident, upon a return to duty and for reasonable suspicion. They operate on an appointment and on-call basis. When the testing is completed, the results are confidential because the couple does not view the individual results.

"I send the specimen out to different labs," Denise Clark said. "I usually send it to whatever lab the company uses, but I've got a lab that I'm affiliated with if they want to use it.

Housed in a 1988 Winnebago LeSharo, the mobile lab unit is fully equipped with all the necessities of a Department of Transportation testing facility:

The mobility of the lab allows Konza Lab Connection to travel to individual businesses to perform the drug and alcohol testing. Dick and Denise Clark said this convenience saves employers money.

"Instead of having to keep an employee on the clock and have them drive across town to get a test done, risking liability, we'll come straight to your workplace and be done with a test in eight or nine minutes." Dick Clark said.

A restroom occupies the midsection of the vehicle, while a scating area, computer, printer and refrigerator for storing specimen are housed in the rear. Dick Clark said the restroom's small size, however, often surprises

"I tell them it's kind of the same as an airplane restroom, only there's no turbulence," he said. *But I tell them I'll drive around the block once or twice if it helps them to relax.

"It's a really fun business," Dick Clark said. "In insurance, I'm used to taking a beating from people, but here you get such a warm greeting from everyone."

Denise Clark said these relationships help clients to feel comfortable in potentially awkward situations.

"There's an element of surprise when we show up, because only the employers know when we're coming, not the employees," she said. "So we get people who will come out to the vehicle who are pretty anxious. But I'll radio up to Dick Clark that I'm ready for the test, and I'll hear him already laughing away with the client, and he'll say, 'Just a minute, let mefinish this joke."

The couple agreed that one of their goals is to help the local community.

"I feel that the business we're doing, helping employers and employees, really pulls the community together," Denise Clark

Dick Clark said he hopes additional drug testing in the workplace will help to lessen the number of drug users in America.

"The statistics are staggering. The nation spends $246 billion per year to take care of people recovering from drugs," he said. "I tell our kids, I hope someday Denise Clark and I will have to quit performing drug tests because your generation put us out of business.

Senate honors Cobb's life

By JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate approved a resolution Thursday to acknowledge the life and accomplishments of Andrew Charles "Drew" Cobb, II. a K-State student who recently committed suicide.

"Passing this resolution is the least we can do to show support to his family and the many organizations he was involved in." Vice Senate Chair Ryan Walker said. "I had the privilege of knowing Drew, and honestly, it is a sad situation that happened."

Cobb was a member of the United Black Voices and the Black Student Union.

"A lot of people felt a sense of loss with this tragedy," Student Body President Kyle Barker said. "It is important to recognize this is a great tragedy and to celebrate the time we did have with Drew."

A copy of the resolution will be given to Cobb's parents, United Black Voices, the Black Student Union, the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development and the Multicultural Student Organization.

Student Body Vice President Brandon Kauffman said he felt adopting the resolution spoke for the entire student body.

"Students really care about other students on this campus," Kauffman said. "This lets us come together and express sorrow."

In other action, Senate introduced a resolution for endorsement of a James Bond Month.

The month would include speakers discussing topics such as foreign affairs and the portrayal of women in the cinema, lithograph artist Jeff Marshall, the James Bond movies and the third annual GoldenEye Tournament.

Also, applications for Senate committee chairs are due at 5 p.m. today in the Office of Student Activities and Services

Campus waste policy needs to be proactive

State has made a costly mistake. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has fined the university more than $29,000 after a March 1999 state inspection. The inspection found that K-State violated 12 of the hazardous wastes polícies.

Part of the projects include conducting an annual Resource. Conservation and Recovery Act workshop, provide annual hazardous waste training for all university employees and hire a student to work as an intern for the university's department of Environmental Health and Safery.

K-State is doing a good job in terms of trying to become more educated and educating others. However, the question remains, why wasn't this done in the first place? Why did the university let its standards slip making them be placed in this situation?

In the future, the university needs to be more aware of guidelines such as these before it is fined.

The funding disparity and financial strife brought on by Title IX, among other issues, needs to be fixed.

It is a problem because it ends up hurring male athletes in sports not dominated by revenue, which has become the driving force in the world of intercollegiate athletics.

Recently, the University of Kansas announced it was cutting men's swimming and diving along with men's tennis as a result of budget deficits and maintaining compliance with Title IX.

Sure, no one wants to cut programs. Not Bob Frederick, athletic director at

He simply had no choice. Sadly, there is not enough revenue to keep all of the sports that athletes want and offer equal opportunities for both men and women at competitive and essentially raise more money?

How do we keep these programs competitive, and still maximize the bottom line of fiscal responsibility, when increasing operating costs and budgetary issues plague athletics? Almost every athletic director in America is questioning where future dollars are going to come from. One solution would be for athletic departments to be funded by the federal government, which passed the law in 1972 in order to subsidize some of these non-revenue producing sports.

That is a tough step to take when looking at all of the programs competing for federal dollars but it is perhaps the only fair way to

If the government will not do it, universities need to find other ways to make funding Title IX work. It isn't easy considering the costs of construction and costs to maintain competition facilities.

It is one reason why K-State has increased the donation level for football.

There is no other choice. Each dollar that K-State head coach Bill Snyder's football program makes each fall supports all of the other nonrevenue producing sports. It, along with men's basketball. carries the burden for all the other programs. There is little funding from the university, as the department operates on generated revenue to fund the majority of its programs.

Perhaps it is time to expect other sports to turn a profit. Maybe it is time to charge student admission to all events and truly make colle giate athletics all about the bottom line.

It seems logical to believe that if someone really wanted to go see any collegiate sporting event, they would pay to see it.

The other way is corporate sponsorship of sports. After all, we have it for everything else, why not have it for different sports that would give back to the university? How would this be any different than a contract for signage at a stadium or an outside-sponsored professor?

I realize there are sponsors for some sports in the league, but what about funding all of

Because, currently, athletes are losing with Title IX. One could argue, that the reason men lose when it comes to sports being cut is because they have won all of these years. But it is wrong to hold grudges and simply do things because it was a certain way

That conversation is irrelevant. There must be an increase in athletic funding.

The relevant choice is fixing Title IX's inequities.

Spring time to experience fun in Manhattan

A certain electricity runs through the air this time of

Suddenly, the dull gray of winter is washed away with the spring rain and everywhere you look, life abounds.

After hibernating in our homes all winter, the beautiful weather makes the soul want to fling off the layers that have bound it and makes us want to run free.

It seems nearly impossible to conjure the strength to finish all the work that must be completed by the semester's

Being the overachiever that I am, I usually find myself working in the toasty library. cursing myself all the while for not being outside and enjoying the amazing weather.

But after restraining myself for the past few springs, I have figured out a way to enjoy the weather and cross of items from my neverending "to do" list.

As I have come to see it, there are certain things that must be done before graduation.

Sure, passing classes is on top of the list, but there are lots of things about Manhattan that make it a special place.

Over the past few years, I have compiled a list of things that everyone should do before they graduate to get the full "Manhappiness" experience. Doing them this time of year not only gets one closer to the end of the "to do" list, but also provides a break from the insanity of school. (There is no real order to the list) 1. Spend an afternoon (or several) at Pillsbury Crossing. Grab your friends, some good tunes and a cooler and you will have the making of a perfect alternoon.

2. Play Frisbee golf on campus. You know you always see people walking on campus. late in the afternoon throwing a disc-like thing in the trees. Well, that is Frishee golf. What better time than now to go play, or learn how. How many other places have you seen Frishee golf courses at?

3. Go to Manhattan's Sunset Zoological Park. I know, the thought of a zoo in Manhattan is a little strange, but it is definitely educational. Going to the zoo takes you out of your natural environment, which can be much needed. Plus, you can make funny faces at the monkeys. They won't mind. 4. Grab some ice cream from Call Hall. Let's face II. Call Hall ice cream is K-State. It is on campus and is a cheap, sinful snack that will fill your dairy and sugar requirements for the day and cheer up any aftermoon. 5. Go swinging at City Park. There is nothing that feels as free as swinging. The feeling of pure weightlessness, your stomach dropping as you reach new heights can bring back the feelings of childhood.

6. Go to the KS or Manhattan sign. Both are an easy drive and have great views of the city. The best time to go is at night; the city lights are beautiful.

7. Drink at the Aggie Lounge on a Friday afternoon. I hear this is a time-honored tradition at K-State. If you graduate without doing this, forget about calling yourself a true K-Stater.

8. Camp, hike, cookout or go skinny dipping at Tuttle Creek State Park. Tuttle is a piece of heaven. I consider Tuttle a sanctuary, a place where you can get back to nature and find yourself.

9. Hike Konza Prairie Biological Station. They made a documentary about it for a reason. Go roam on the rolling hills, it is a great way to stretch the legs, get MICHELLE BERTUGLIA some sun and see the > occasional buffalo. 10, Go to some kind of sporting event. I know this is not a problem for most of you, but for those who have not been - go. I waited a long time before I experienced this, and let me say, the energy that pulses through the air at any sporting event is contagious. Once you go, you will quickly learn it is a whole subculture that must be experienced.

11. Watch the sun set from Top of The World. This spot is rumored to be the highest point in Manhattan. Watching the sun set up there is relaxing, romantic and if you catch a good one, can make a breathtaking memory.

12. Volunteer. There are tons and tons of organizations that would love just an hour of your time. From Big Brothers and Big. Sisters of Manhattan to Habitat for Humanity, there is little that is as enriching as giving back to the community.

13 Visit the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Haven't you always wondered what that thing that looks like a cheese puff hanging in the window really is? Check out some art, and go find out.

14. Go to Midnight Madness. It happens on the final Thursday once a month in the Purple Masque Theatre and the last one for the semester will be May 3. It is an impromptu evening put on by KSU theater students. They will make you roll in your seats with laughter.

If you are a senior, add some of these things to your "to do" list before you pack your stuff and head out of town. They will make your last weeks here more memorable:

If you are not graduating any time soon, take your time, start doing some of this stuff now and you will find when you do leave "Manhappiness," you will have had the full K-State experi-

Students participate in campuswide Easter egg hunt

EVAN SEMÓN/Collegian

Annie Tompkins, freshman in open-option, redeems her egg for a free pizza coupon from Alli Walbridge, Union Program Council employee and senior in human resource management. Tompkins found the egg while walking back to her residence after swimming at the Natatorium this morning. The "All Campus Easter Egg Hunt" was sponsored by UPC.

By QUINN ASPEGREN Kansas State Collegian

More than 2,000 sweet-stuffed Easter eggs were strewn across main parts of campus early Thursday morning for the first ever All-Campus Easter Egg Hunt, sponsored by the Union Program

It took the 15 UPC volunteers an hour and a half to hide all the eggs before students began sweeping them up as early as 7:30 a.m.

"My roommates and I started at 7:30 this morning, and at that time most of the eggs were easy to scoop up. By eight, many of the eggs were gone," Mariette Benage, junior in animal science, said. "I was surprised to see so many people out

UPC decided the Easter egg hunt would be a great way for students to find out more about the council

"We spent over $300 on candy, and we had at least 34 pounds in chocolate eggs alone," Amy Pfannenstiel, graduate assistant program adviser, said.

"We stuffed more than 2,000 eggs with at least 125 pounds of candy," Pfannenstiel said, as she tallied the pounds of candy on her handheld calculator.

Even though the candy made for sweet treats and munchies for long hours spent in classes, students who were lucky enough to find eggs stuffed with paper were even better

"We bought all kinds of KSU prizes from the Union Bookstore, like license plates, key chains, T-shirts and sweatshirts," Phannenstiel said. "Many of the businesses in town also donated prizes. The people who find eggs with prize slips can redeem them up here on in our third-floor office." UPC members said they were sure that most, if not all, of the eggs would be found by the time the hunt was supposed to end at 5 p.m.

"We wanted to make this a fun event for the students that everyone could participate in. Everyone who participated got a prize, some were just bigger than others," Pfannenstiel said.

"Our purpose it to reach a new audience, and if we manage to reach a handful of people who have never heard of the UPC, then we think that we've been successful.

The volunteers have enjoyed planning the Easter egg hunt, and I think students have really enjoyed finding the eggs and coming up to see us.

UPC members said they would like to thank all of the businesses that donated prizes for this year's

Easter egg hunt, and they are looking forward to next year's event. "The UPC has several scheduled events and activities throughout the year, and the KSU Web page has the updated calendar of events listed. Students just have to click on the UPC button," Ken Zook, graduate assistant program adviser, said.

"We usually have at least three or four UPC events per week that range anywhere from arts and entertainment to events like the Easter egg hunt."

Residence halls bid for award

Kansas State Collegian

"Survivor" junkies, Internet talkshow hosts and even Kenney Ford. the namesake of Ford Hall, were in attendance at Wednesday's meeting of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls

The special guests were concerned with oral bids for the KSUARH Hall of the Year Award, which will be announced April 24.

Goodnow Hall, Moore Hall. Smurthwaite Scholarship House and Ford were selected as finalists for the award based on written bids they submitted to KSUARH.

Andrew Bell, vice president of KSUARH and sophomore in management information systems, said nine residence halls submitted written bids. A panel of judges then evaluated those bids based on the halls' involvement, spirit and community. The halfs in the top 50 percent were named finalists.

The four finalists were then given five minutes to make an oral presentation. Angela Juno, junior in animal sciences and industry and KSUARH representative for Smurthwaite, said it has taken the cooperation of a lot of people to work as much into their presentation as possible while allowing for creative flair.

"Everyone involved has actively contributed to writing the skit, organizing a price list and trimming the skit to fit into the allotted 5 minutes," she said

The residents of Goodnow staged a fictional broadcast of "KSU Late Nite," the Internet talk show that is broadcast live from Goodnow, featuring a small-scale replica of Bell said there was strong competition for the award.

"This year nine out of the 10 residence halls competed very hard to be in the top 50 percent," Bell said. "In fact, several of the judges this year called me up personally to tell me what a wonderful job the residence halls were doing on campus."

Norman, Okla.

Kansas State Collegian

Head coach Steve Bietau said his tennis squad has two specific things in its favor heading into K-State's two-match road trip this weekend.

First, the Wildcats are playing well, and most importantly, they're winning.

In fact, Bietau's club is riding a seasonhigh five-game winning streak, with victories over Big 12 foes Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Colorado, as well as Fresno State on the road in the past three and a half weeks.

Moreover, No. 44 K-State (10-6, 6-1 Big 12) has won seven of its past nine matches overall, and five out of six in league play.

"Our players are learning what it takes to win, and they're showing that they understand that," Bietau said. "So the way important and winning is important, because if you don't win those matches. you don't have the same confidence level and you don't have the same possibilities for postseason

"This team has a chance to do some good things, but that road goes through Oklahoma, and you can take a turn if you want to."

The Wildcats make their first stop in Norman on Saturday for an 11 a.m. first serve against Oklahoma (4-10, 0-7). followed by another 11 a.m. date Sunday with No. 15 Oklahoma State (15-3, 6-1) in

The Sooners might have lost seven straight, including nine of their past 10, but Bietau said his Cats won't be looking past unranked OU at the Westwood Tennis Center. He learned that lesson last spring.

In early April 2000, then-No. 42 K-State barely avoided an upset at the hands of Oklahoma in Manhattan, 5-4.

We had a better team than Oklahoma did last year, and we were fortunate to get out with a win," Bietau said. "I felt like we got outplayed, and I got out coached in that match, even though we won it.

"The other thing is, I've been in too many matches with Mark Johnson, their coach. I know he's a good coach, and I know he will find ways to try to exploit anything he can in the way that we play. That's one of the things we're talking about this week."

Sunday's match up with the Cowboys at the DuBois Tennis Center is a different story. The Cats fell to OSU, 7-2, last year in Manhattan, and the Pokes are rolling on a 10-match winning streak.

Senior Maria Phillips has been victorious in 10 straight matches and Linda Faltynkova has won her past nine, while the No. 2 doubles squad of Katie Kolodynskia and Faltynkova holds a perfect 18-0 mark.

Nonetheless, junior Alena Jecminkova, the Cats' No. 1 singles player, said the team isn't intimidated by the Cowboys. After all, K-State has some impressive marks of its own, as the No. 1 doubles squad of Jecminkova and senior Eva Novotna is undefeated this season.

"We know they have some really good girls on the team, and they'll be really good matches, I think, but we're ready," Jecminkova said. "We're ready to fight."

K-State's play and winning streak of late gives the Cats a good chance of competing well at OSU, Bietau said - as well as down the road, with his team facing three of the top four teams in the conference in the last two weeks of the season.

"Without winning most, if not all, of those last four matches, I'm not sure they could be in a position where it would be realistic to say. 'Yeah, we know what it takes to beat an Oklahoma State,' or something like that," he said.

"I think the important thing about our record is that the last two weeks, they've played the kind of tennis they needed to play to win - matches that give them the confidence that I think they need to take the next step."

Coaches name 4 Athletes of the Week

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Four track and field athletes earned the coaching staff's Athletes of the Week for their performances at the Texas Relays and Emporia State Relays last weekend. First, sophomore Austra Skujyte finished fifth in the javelin at the Texas Relays with a season-best mark distance of 150 feet, 5 inches, sixth in the shot put with a NCAA provisional-qualifying mark of 50 feet, 63/4 inches, 11th in the long jump with a leap of 19-1.25 and 16th in the high jump with a season-best 5 feet, 5 3/4 inches.

This was the second time in the last three weeks that Skujyte has made the coaches' list.

Making her first appearance is sophomore Mandi Peterson, who threw a career-best and NCAA provisional-qualifying mark of 154 feet, 8 inches to win the javelin at Emporia

"Mandi has overcome various injuries throughout the year that have affected her training," head coach Cliff Royelto said. "She has shown steady improvement throughout the season. She hasn't even scratched the surface of what she is capable of."

Sophomore Chika Onyebuchi tallied two career bests at Emporia with a third-place finish in the 100 meters with a time of 11.94 and a second-place finish in the shot put with a mark of 46 feet, 9 inches. Onyebuchi also ran a leg of winning 4.400 meter relay.

On the men's side, junior Thesiaus Robinson placed second in the 200 meters at Emporia State with a time of 22.22. He also finished second in the 400 meters with a season-best clocking of 48.20.

"It is not surprising to me that Thesiaus ran as well as he did," assistant coach Michael Smith said. "He is a competitor and has been a steady performer all year."

The fifth athlete named was sophomore Jim Gruenbacher, who won the pole vault at Emporia State with a personal-best of 15 feet, 11 3/4 inches.

Cats hope to capitalize against OU

By DAN SMITH State Collegian

resh off a two-game sweep of ACC opponent Maryland on Monday and Tuesday, K-State will look to extend its winning fortunes at 3 p.m. today in game one of a threegame set against Big 12 opponent Oklahoma at Frank Myers Field.

"We need to win," junior pitcher Luke Robertson said. "We're down to the stretch now where we have to win, and there's a difference between wanting it and going out there and getting it done.

The Cats (14-2, 4-14) have found a way to get it done lately, behind an improved offensive attack and a bullpen that has grown stronger as the season has progressed.

In order to beat a Sooners (14-23, 8-10) team that head coach Mike Clark said could easily be overlooked this weekend, an increased focus from the Cats' starting pitchers is a big part of the game plan.

"The key to this series for us is for our starting pitchers to pitch well," Clark said. "If they pitch well, we won't have to tax our bullpen that much and we can use Kelvin in the save situations.

Robertson (4-5, 6.28 ERA) takes the mound in game one looking to improve on a seven-run, 11-hit performance last weekend against Oklahoma State.

I'm pretty disappointed in the way that I've been pitching. I'm going to need to come out and pitch better than I have in my last two outings," he said.

"I know I'm a better pitcher than what I've put out there on the mound the last couple of games, so this is my chance to go out there and prove my worth as a pitcher again on this staff."

Robertson's struggles from the mound as of late have been eased somewhat though, thanks to the Cats' improving pen-

"It's been pretty good. We felt like it would be a strong point and we need it to continue to be," Clark said. "Right now, it's hand-to-hand combat. It's key that they hold the fort so that if we get behind early in the ballgame, they can hold them in check while our offense gets us back in the ballgame."

If recent history counts for anything,

Scott Tallman pitches in K-State's game against Oral Roberts earlier in the season. The Cats will take on Oklahoma this weekend in Manhattan.

Oklahoma might hold a slight advantage over K-State. The Sooners have taken nine of the past 10 matchups against the Cats, including last year's sweep in Norman.

Still, Clark said what's done is done and his team will need to worry more about this year's group of Sooners instead of statistics.

"I'm hoping that we'll come out and pitch it better and do a better job on offense," he said. "Last year, offense was our biggest concern.

regarded. This was a top-25 team preseason, and top-four Big 12, preseason, and things have gone that way but we've got to go out and outwork and outhustle them.'

Offense shouldn't be a problem this time around though. K-State has seen a resurgence at the plate, behind the hot bats of senior Josh Cavender, who's gone .421 in his last five games with six RBI, and sophomore Pat Maloney, who went 4-for-7 against the Terrapins with seven RBI.

"Our average has gone up the last couple of weeks because we're just having more competitive at-bats," Clark said. "We're seeing the ball better and our timing is better, but these pitchers we're going to see this weekend are good pitchers."

Oakland kicker prime example of justice not being served to athletes

What a difference being an athlete makes.

Oakland placekicker Sebastian Janikowski, who's spent more time on trial than on the field for the Raiders, stood with his lawyers Wednesday as he awaited the verdict.

"Guilty," said the Leon DEREK BOSS County (Fla.) court clerk, to Janikowski's utter disbelief. Had I been there I probably would have cheered.

Too bad the clerk corrected herself only a few seconds later (just a minor mistake), clearing the former Florida State All-American's charges of drug possession and evidence tampering. And if that wasn't enough to ring my bell, the jury only deliberated the decision for about 80 minutes.

Nonetheless, what drug was Janikowski possessing, you might ask? None other than > GHB, the notorious date-rape drug, which can cause blackouts when mixed with alcohol.

Now, for those of you who have never seen Janikowski on TV — believe me - he looks like the kind of guy who would need GHB to pick up on a Friday or To put it bluntly, he's fat and ugly with a bald, misshaped head. But before I get ahead of myself, here's a run-down of this whole GHB possession

In the early morning of June 21, police approached Janikowski's car in a fraternity house parking lot. Janikowski and two of his Florida State buddies were in the vehicle, with 20-year-old Jesse Harris in the front seat with him and 25-year-old Jay Hoffman sitting in back.

Officers said they saw Janikowski pour a clear liquid from a water bottle onto a floor mat in the front seat when they neared the car.

However, Janikowski testified Wednesday that he didn't know GHB was present when police arrested him, and that he wasn't even sure what GHB was in the first place.

What a crock. You're going to tell me that a former college student at a major university, let alone a football player, hasn't ever heard of the date-rape drug? I'm sorry, but I'm not buying it. Somehow, though - through some unbelievable stretch of the imagination the jury did. I guess being a well-known athlete really does pay off, in more ways than a simple salary or a variety of endorsements.

And get this, Harris even testified Wednesday that he - not Janikowski was the one who poured the drug out in the front seat of the car, although at the time he thought it was just alcohol.

Is Janikowski paying this Harris guy off to cover things up? I don't know that any amount of money would entice me to serve a little jail time.

Nevertheless, the fact of the matter remains - justice was not served. Janikowski was let off the hook, not once, but for the second time in less than a year.

The 23-year-old was acquitted by a sixperson jury in only 50 minutes on June 13, clearing charges of offering a Tallahassee policeman $300 to release his roommate after an argument with a bouncer at a local nightclub. I'm sick of hearing about Janikowski's frequent brushes with the law, but even worse. I'm tired of hearing him get off scotfree. He might be an athlete, but he isn't even that good.

Here's an interesting quote from Janikowski after Wednesday's trial:

"I'm pretty sure (police) are always looking out for somebody who's a football player," he said. "I'm just a normal person like everybody else. Why would you treat me different?"

Good question.

If they wouldn't have treated him different, he would have faced up to five years in prison and a possible deportation, as he is a resident alien and has a green card that permits him to work in the United States. I say we ship him back to Poland.

An amnesia-stricken housewife, a disabled half-deaf kidnapper, and an excon who talks regularly with his foulmouthed hand puppet, Hinky Binky, only somewhat reflect the mysteriously dark comedy of "Fuddy Meers."

"It's Dr. Seuss for adults," director Christopher Piatt said. "It's tremendously appealing, like a circus, to draw the audience in, and then it packs a hard punch at the end."

"Fuddy Meers" was written over a year ago by David Lindsay-Abaire, and is the first full-length play Piatt, senior in theatre, has directed.

"We're one of the first colleges to perform this play," Piatt said, "and I chose to direct it because of the ingenious way the script uses comedy to sort of shield and mask a very dark and

"Fuddy Meers" will be performed at 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre. Tickets are available at the door or at McCain Box Office at $3 for students and $5 for the public.

scary story." This new cornedy follows Claire, a mother and wife with a form of psychogenic amnesia, who loses her memory every night when she goes to sleep and tries to relearn her identity every day. One morning, a limping, lisping man kidnaps her, and as soon as her husband and stoner son discover her disappearance, an unraveling plot begins with the help of many dysfunctional characters

Gertie, played by Amanda Moon, senior in theatre, is Claire's mother, who suffered a stroke years earlier and speaks with a severe speech impediment that Moon said had to be mastered within the four weeks of rehearsal.

"Throughout the play's confusion, Gertie knows the whole story, but no one can understand her," Moon said. "The hardest part for me was getting the speech to seem natural and physically changing my facial movements.

Acting as two people occupying the same brain was somewhat tricky, said Tyler Woods, who plays Millet, the childish con with a talkative hand pupp

"Millet was pushed around so long by abusive people that he created this alter ego, Hinky Binky," said Woods, sophomore in music education and theater. "Getting the movement down of talking to a sock on my hand took a little Lighting and scenery also contributes highly to the narration of the play, said Ginger O'Haver, lighting designer.

"At the beginning, the lighting creates a very surreal feeling, following the plot's dream-like state," O'Haver, senior in architectural engineering, said. "As the play progresses and makes more sense to the audience, the scenery gets more

"Fuddy Meers" will be performed in the Purple Masque Theatre, which suits the play perfectly. Piatt said. "The Purple Masque is a really funky theater," Piatt said, "so it fits the play and especially the non-traditional feel of the two late-night performances." On Friday and Saturday, "Fue Meers" will run an 11 p.m. show in addition to the 7 p.m. show. This is a result of the success of Midnight Madness, a late-night theater program that has become popular among students, Piatt

"Deciding to do the late shows is in support of Midnight Madness, but also, the proceeds for those two shows will be donated to the Women's Crisis Center and the Regional AIDS Project, RAP." Piatt

Medical themes are usually involved with all of Lindsay-Abaire's plays, said Garrett Gottschalk, who plays Richard, Claire's goofball husband.

"His plays are unconventional," Gottschalk said. "He writes these odd comedies that are so eclectically brilliant."

rape fact from index cards. A big myth about rape, Roddy said, is that the attacker will be a stranger hiding in the bushes.

Eighty-four percent of women who are raped know their assailants," she said. "People need to know how to react best with their dates if things start to go wrong."

Mina and Gina said they attended the first two sessions of the workshop April 3 and 5 and plan to attend the remaining three classes.

They said they are learning quite a bit from Roddy and Falco. who make the class a lot of fun. Gina said she and her mom are already pretty close, but the class gives them more time to spend with one another, while learning tricks to get out of sticky situations.

"It is nice to have something to do together," Mina said. "We just thought it was something we should know."

"Unless another political conflict arises between China and the U.S., the U.S. wouldn't reduce trade," said Wayne Nafziger, distinguished professor of economics. "Otherwise, I think we'll see an increase of labor intensive products.

Nafziger said China is becoming more competitive with products such as textiles, clothing and footwear, that are highly dependent on labor.

"I think for the moment our trade is not in jeopardy, unless something else flares up," he said.

Another item he said this recent standoff could effect is China's potential entrance into the World Trade Organization.

"I think that there still might be opposition among congress people to a World Trade Organization membership," he said. "Although unless something else interferes, it's not likely that congress would put up any barriers to China's WTO membership."

"We thought it would be fun for a few of us to do together. It is something different and inexpensive," Larson said. "I like to try different things. We'll see how it turns out."

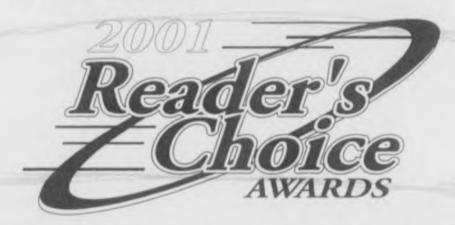

Schlageck said the museum sponsors one or two workshops each semester, which are open to the public usually at no cost.

campus committed to helping students stay faithful to the K-State honor pledge, has worked to make this week possible. HIPE is trying to increase awareness about the honor pledge, which reads, "On my honor, as a student, I have neither given nor received unauthorized aid on this academic work."

"The main goal of HIPE is communication," said Helen Marcoux, graduate student in student counseling and personal services and HIPE adviser. "The best way to get the message across is having students talk to students."

Marcoux said that according to a study, 75 to 95 percent of students on colleges and university campuses have self-reported cheating on academics. One of the problems, she said, is that many students do not know enough information about the Honor

"When students are reported for academic dishonesty violations, their first reaction is, 'I didn't know," Marcoux said. "Hopefully, HIPE will get the message out and help students understand the system."

Loni Marietta, HIPE member, said one of the goals of HIPE is to educate students about what exactly qualifies as

"A lot of students sometimes get confused as to what is cheating and what isn't," said Marietta, freshman in marketing and international business. "It's something that every student should know because the consequences can affect one's life."

When more students know about the system, she said, the future number of reported violated cases will decrease.

Marietta said she gets a mixed reaction from other students when she tells them she is a member of HIPE. "Usually, the first question I get is. 'What is that?' and the Student killed in car accident

Death of freshman occurs Sunday morning after car runs off highway.

By BRYAN SCRIBNER Kansas State Collegian

A K-State student died early Sunday morning in a car accident near Edna, Kan.

Jay Ott, freshman in horticulture, was the passenger of a vehicle driven by Sarah Mitts, of Edna. He died when the car drove off U.S. Highway 166, struck a culvert and flipped. Mitts was injured but not fatally wounded. The accident occurred at 6:45 a.m.

Ott's mother, Pam Ott, said he was a member of the K-State Horticulture Club and the K-State chapter of Golf Course Management Superintendents of America.

Ott was a recipient of an Agriculture Future of America scholarship, and he was planning to change his major to golf course management and information systems.

Ott was a member of the National Honor Society, Renaissance Club, First Christian Church, 4-H, FFA, a horticulture judging team and two horticulture societies, Pam Ott said. He also played soccer and golf, delivered food for Meals-On-Wheels and was a sheep showman.

Pam Ott said her son was a bright and happy person. She said he had places to go and things to

"He loved life," she said. "He was very close to his family, and his brother and sister miss him

Ott's father, Doug Ott, said his son had a million-dollar smile.

"I think everybody that met him liked him," he said. "He always had a smile."

Ott's funeral will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at the First Christian Church in Coffeyville, Kan. Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, said memorial arrangements on campus are pending.

Games, face-painting and hissing cockroaches brightened the Sunday afternoon of Manhattan area children who attended the Sunset Zoological Park's Easter Eggstravaganza.

The zoo set up games that educated children about egg-laying animals and gave them plastic eggs with prizes in them. Whenever an event is at the zoo, educational games are made about animals and sometimes the environment, said

Eileen Bauer, marketing development director at Sunset Zoo.

"The children get a whole new awareness," she said. "Most of the time, if they think about eggs, they just think of chickens, but we educate them about other egg-laying animals."

At one of the games, four stuffed toy animals a leopard, a bat, a monkey and a duck-billed platypus - were set out, and children had to say which one laid eggs for a prize.

Shane Turpin, who ran the booth, said that sometimes the children would become confused when thinking of the answer.

"It helps kids," he said. "It's a challenge because a bat has wings, so they think it's a bird and birds lay eggs, and some of them just don't know what a platypus is."

Other features included face painting and Animal Ambassador presentations, where children learned about animals they don't normally see.

The animals at Sunday's presentation included Madagascar hissing cockroaches, a silkie chicken, a tokay gecko and a Vietnamese Walking Stick, all of which lay eggs.

Stephanie Hoefler, explorer at Sunset Zoo, said she enjoyed being a part of the presentations and seeing people's reactions to the animals.

"I liked watching how people react, especially little kids because these animals aren't even normally in the zoo, so they only see them here," she said. After the presentations, those involved

U.S.-China relations likely damaged due to spy plane incident

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The spy-plane standoff is certain to complicate U.S .-Chinese relations and affect congressional votes on arms for Taiwan and trade with Beijing, Democrats and Republicans said Sunday.

"They've already paid a price," Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said on CBS' "Face the Nation." The Chinese will find harder going in Congress, he said.

Agreeing with that assessment were lawmakers, many of whom are involved in foreign affairs on Capitol Hill, appearing on the Sunday talk shows.

Congress was urged by a top Chinese trade official over the weekend against linking the incident with an expected vote over China's trade relations with the United States.

"China doesn't wish to fight a trade war with any country," Gao Yan was quoted by the government-run China

The Bush administration is likely to face a decision this summer whether to extend trade benefits to China for another year because China's efforts to get in the World Trade Organization have bogged down.

But several lawmakers said the recent standoff is likely to have lasting effects on everything from the arms deal to trade relations.

"This is not some incident that will pass in the night. This will cause a fundamental change in our relations with China," Sen. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "There will be retribution."

Other lawmakers counseled caution in handling decisions affecting China.

"It is in the best interest of our country and the world to put this relationship back on track," Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., said on CBS.

The administration is scheduled to start meetings with China on Wednesday over the standoff. Many expect the administration will take a hard line.

A week ago, top officials such as Vice President Dick Cheney and Secretary of State Colin Powell made the administration's case on the talk shows for the release of the detained air crew of 24 Americans.

On Sunday, no administration official appeared on them.

President Bush stayed at his Texas ranch Saturday rather than attend the crew's homecoming ceremony in Washington state. He did send them greetings.

"He does not believe that politicians need to always insert themselves into tender moments," Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

The spy plane's pilot, Lt. Shane Osborn, said he was not offended that Bush stayed away and said the president invited the crew to visit the White House

"It didn't matter," Osborn said on ABC's "This Week." "As long as the family was here, it really didn't matter who else was here.

Lt. Patrick Honeck, a crew member. thanked the administration team for its work in bringing them home.

"We never lost the faith," Honeck said on CBS. He said that immediately after the collision with a Chinese fighter jet sent their plane into a dive, crew members thought a crash was certain.

"Once the aircraft started going out of control," Honeck said, "I think pretty much everybody on the aircraft thought they were going to die."

Such harrowing accounts of the collision have helped fuel emotions in Congress.

Lawmakers plan to press the White House to sell Taiwan the most sophisticated weapons available, including the Aegis anti-missile radar system.

Bush is expected to decide on that Chinese officials threatened to put the Navy spy plane crew on trial, according to Navy pilot and Kansas native Jeffery Vignery.

Vignery said on NBC's "Meet the Press" Sunday morning that the crew was told that "after an investigation we would obviously have to go to court, or whatever it is that they have over there. "There was a lot of propaganda, pretty much trying to indicate that it was our fault for the accident that took place," Vignery said. "All of us on board knew definitely who was at fault. We were just doing a job," But Vignery said crew members never worried they not would get home, eventually.

"We knew that the American government was working hard for us, and the support from the American people was there for us," Vignery said. "There was never a doubt, I think, in any of the

Legislators prepare for work on state budget

TOPEKA - Work begins in carnest this week on the last spending bill of the year, and for many legislators, the goal is to avoid as much pain as possible.

The state is confronting a $205million gap between the spending to which it is committed and the revenues it expects to collect in the 2002 fiscal year, which begins July

The House Appropriations Committee and the Senate Ways and Means Committee both are scheduled to meet Tuesday to begin drafting the bill that will reconcile spending with revenues and wrap up the 2002 budget.

The committees have set aside six days each before the full Legislature reconvenes April 25.

Leaders have been talking about finding low-hanging fruit, money-raising schemes that are easy to pluck and ripe politically.

They have staff members compiling lists of gimmicks and tricks to make the fiscal 2002 budget look better.

They're also talking about tax increases, although those bring pain as well as relieve it.

Democrats have focused on ideas that place the new burdens on the wealthy, and increases in sales, alcohol and tobacco taxes are in the mix

Some legislators worry that resolving the budget problems will become a drawn-out epic, on the gaudy Technicolor scale of "Gone With the Wind."

"It's like Scarlett returning to Tara after the Yankee troops have been through," said Sen. David Adkins, R-Leawood, a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

"We're going to try to make a dress out of the draperies," he said. "We'll be digging radishes out of the ground and waiting for Ashley to show up.

Before leaving the Capitol on April 6 for their spring break, legislators approved an incomplete 59.11-billion budget for fiscal 2002.

About $4.66 billion would come from the general fund, which has most state tax dollars and represents the biggest source of money for state programs.

The general fund is where the problem is. Legislators appropriated $4.66 billion from that fund. then learned they are obligated to spend an additional $19.9 million on social programs.

The proposals they have passed would increase general fund spending by $230 million, or 5.2 percent, from the current fiscal year. Outside the social programs, legislators can increase spending about $25 million, or 0.6 percent.

The situation might not sound so bad, and some legislators, particularly conservative Republicans, don't think it is. But others disagree.

And lawmakers are under pressure to spend more money. Education officials and Gov. Bill Graves sought large increases for public schools.

State employees want to preserve pay raises.

University administrators worry about improving pay to retain faculty.

"I think it will be extremely difficult," said Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley, D-

3 bodies recovered from plane crash Saturday

TUCSON, Ariz. - Three bodies were found Saturday in the wreckage of a small plane missing since Tuesday on a flight to Milwaukee, authorities said.

The single-engine Cirrus CR20 was destroyed on impact and burned after the crash in a mountainous area 30 miles east of Tucson, said ferry Johnston, regional operations officer for the Federal Aviation Administration in Lawndale, Calif.

Johnston said three bodies were recovered from the crash scene, but their identities were being withheld until relatives could be notified.

The plane left Tucson for General Mitchell International Airport in Milwaukee. It stopped in Albuquerque, N.M., shortly after taking off but was not heard from again, the FAA said.

The Arizona Civil Air Patrol search crew spotted the wreckage about noon Saturday, and some numbers on the plane still were intact to identify it as the missing craft, Johnston said.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reported Saturday night on its Web site that the plane was piloted by Douglas Koehler of Mequon.

Family members said Koehler, his brother Rodney Koehler of Appleton and Rodney Koehler's 17year-old son, Christopher, were on the missing plane.

Police arrest rap musician

The Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. —
Rapper Sean Combs was arrested and charged with driving with a suspended license after police pulled him over while he was riding a scooter along a South Beach strip.

Police pulled Combs over Saturday night for making an illegal lane change, said Miami Beach Police Sgt. Peter Bitume.

A driver's license check showed Combs' license was suspended, so he was arrested and released 20 minutes later after he signed a promise to appear in court, Bitume said.

The charge is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $500 and possibly jail time, Bitume said.

Combs' spokeswoman said Sunday that the rapper's license appeared to be suspended because of a paperwork delay.

"Due to the holiday weekend, paperwork that was processed in New York regarding his license had yet to reach the national system," spokeswoman Nathalie Moar said. "It's as simple as that."

Moar said she believes Combs' license was suspended because of a parking fine, but she didn't know when it happened.

"He just found out about it last week, and as soon as he heard about it, he took care of it," she said.

Combs was acquitted last month of bribery and weapons charges stemming from a shooting at a New York nightclub in which three people were injured. A member of his entourage was convicted of first-degree assault and is scheduled to be sentenced Monday.

Combs since has announced that he's changing his stage name from Puff Daddy to P. Diddy when he releases his next album.

Roller hockey club succeeds

By LYNN TREVING

Kansas State Collegian

After years in the making, a K-State club team has achieved regional and national success.

The K-State Roller Hockey Club was established 10 years ago, but the club's faculty adviser, Jerry Remsbecker, said it wasn't until three years ago that members decided they wanted to get serious. They joined the Collegiate Roller Hockey League.

"The last two years, they have come in first place in the Great Plains Region," Remsbecker said.

However, this season, after finishing first in the region, the club continued its success by finishing in the final four at the national tournament.

Eleven members of the club traveled to California, where they competed in the league's National Championship Tournament. Remsbecker said the regional winners were given an automatic bid to the single-elimination tournament, in which 11 Division II teams competed.

"There are about 50 Division II teams throughout the U.S., and we tied for third," Remsbecker said. "Not too bad for being in the league for a third year."

Despite their success, leff Wilke, club president and senior in civil engineering, said the club is at a disadvantage because there are no local facilities, and the club is forced to travel long distances to participate in league events.

"We drive about six hours to most of our league games, whereas other teams drive about two," Wilke said

The club practices at the roller-skating rink in Junction City, which Wilke said is a step up from the tennis courts the club previously used as a practice facility. The club chooses their travel team based on the club members who attend the practices. "Anybody can come out and practice with us at Junction City. Anybody who wants to pay the $7 can play," Wilke said.

While lack of facilities and distance might put the team at a disadvantage, Mike Wolff, the club's team captain and freshman in open-option, said traveling to other states has proved to be a positive recruitment tool.

"We are drawing people from other states that want to play hockey with us," Wolff said, "We are starting to be recognized and inadvertently recruiting people."

As the club continues to raise its level of competitiveness, Remsbecker said the members of the club are dedicated and have seen what it takes to win.

"They say they are going to be in condition and ready next year, and I have no doubt they will be competing for the cup," Remsbecker said. "They are a team. They work together, and that is what makes them good."

Taxpayers scramble to finish forms before filing deadline

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The day of reckoning has arrived for the estimated 26 million taxpayers who have not finished their income tax forms.

The filing deadline for taxpayers in most parts of the country is midnight tonight. In parts of the Northeast, people have until midnight Tuesday because of the Patriot's Day holiday in Massachusetts, home to an Internal Revenue Service center.

Getting that extra day are taxpayers in Massachusetts, Maine. New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and in New York state north of Westchester and Rockland counties.

In their rush to file, tax procrastinators should double-check their math and take care to use the correct tax amount from the tax table, the IRS advises. One way to save possible headaches later on is to list correctly Social Security numbers, including those for dependents.

IRS spokesman Don Roberts estimated that roughly 37 million tax returns would be filed in the final two weeks before the deadline — 11 million last week and 26 million postmarked or electronically filed Monday. About 130 million individual returns in all are expected this year.

Many post offices around the country will be open late to handle returns. The IRS accepts a postmark as proof the return was filed on time.

Taxpayers can request an automatic four-month extension, but they should pay their estimated taxes on time. Otherwise, the IRS will assess a late-payment penalty and interest now running at 8 percent.

Extensions can be obtained by phone by calling (888) 796-1074 some information from the 1999 return is needed to verify identity or with Form 4868.

Those who owe money should mail a check or money order made out to "United States Treasury," rather than the IRS, and include a Social Security number, the year and the type of form filed. For most people this would be "2000 Form 1040."

For people facing a big tax bill they cannot pay all at once, the IRS offers several options. One is credit-card payment through one of the two toll-free numbers: (888) ALL-TAXX or (800) 2PAYTAX.

The call is free, but the companies that run the services for the IRS collect a convenience fee for the transaction. The IRS points out that it gets none of this money, nor does it collect and store credit-card numbers.

The IRS also most likely will approve a request for an installment payment plan if the taxpayer owes less than $25,000 and can pay within a five-year period. To obtain such a plan, attach Form 9465 to the front of the return. There is a $43 fee to set up an installment plan, which carries 8-percent interest and a penalty of 0.25 percent per month once it is approved by the IRS.

The IRS has a program for people with big debts they cannot possibly pay. Known as the offer-in-compromise program, it allows taxpayers to negotiate a lower settlement of their tax debt.

The program has become so popular that the IRS has a buge backlog. The General Accounting Office, which is the investigative arm of Congress, estimated that the number of offers grew from 32,300 in 1997 to 87,500 in 2000.

"That is actually one of our problem areas," said IRS Commissioner Charles Rossotti. "It's going to take some time to get the backlog down."

The week of April 16th brings Earth Week 2001. There are several things you can do this year to help the recycling efforts at K-State. The City of Manhattan will be holding their third annual "Clean Your Files Week" contest. There are various categories so that large or small departments can compete to see who can recycle the most paper. If your department wishes to compete in the City of Manhattan "Clean Your Files Week" contest, contact Sammi Mangus at 587-2404. The KSU Recyling Program is kicking off a new process for recycling old computers. If you have outgrown your current computer or have obsolete computers in storage, your department must complete and submit a Disposition of Property form (DA-110) to the Controller's office. When your form is approved, call us at 532-6446 and we will pick up the computer for recycling. You will need to furnish a copy of the approved form with the computer, and you will need to reformat hard drives and meet requirements for software licensing. We now have a recycling alternative so that you will no longer need to simply discard obsolete computers in the trash. Please take this week to consider what your office can do to help shift the flow of used materials from the waste stream to reuse/recycle inventory. If you have any questions about how you can help the campus recycling efforts, please call KSU Recycles at 532-6446.

I hope the people at the Alumni Center like the marching band because they will be hearing a lot of them.

So basically, what you are saying is that you have overshot your forecasted budget by $1.5 billion? How is that possible? The funny thing is, you are still teaching us math. I knew something was wrong.

Who's that guy with the stinky feet who is always in the Haymaker computer lab?

Hey, Erin, I am really sorry to hear what happened to you with your massage experience. But tell you what, just tell us who massaged you so all the guys at KSU can go and massage his face in.

We spent so much money on those fancy urinals outside of the Union, and I am on three wait lists right now. Thanks. No, really, thanks.

K-State may be out of touch with reality and the rest of the world, but it is definitely in touch with the people who live, work and study within its four narrow walls. Go K-State.

Manhattan fails to rid itself of true sexual misconduct

Editor,

Regarding Erin Schneweis' column Thursday. I would like to express my deep appreciation to the Manhattan community. You banded together to force the laughably trashy but innocuous Adult Funnybone store out of business after a year, on the grounds its presence was damaging to the community, while allowing an actual sexual predator to quietly continue victimizing young women for three years.

Sign causes confusion

Habitual bike chaining could be accidental or active statement of protest

There is a light pole outside of the back entrance of Eisenhower Hall. Upon first glance, you might not think anything about it. Or If you were to think about it (I am not sure why you would), your thought probably would be something laden with utter profundity like, "Huh ... there's a light pole."

Sometimes there is a bike chained to this light pole. I can see it when I look out the window of Eisenhower 225 during my morning poetry class. Under normal circumstances, most people probably would just allow their gazes to skim over the bike an their gazes to skim over the bike and the light pole, or, if they were intrinsic thinkers, they might say to themselves, "Huh ... well ... there is a bike chained to that light pole."

Now, here is the kicker (Prepare yourself). Besides the bike that is chained to the light pole, there also is something more permanently attached. It is (I hope you are ready) a "no bikes" sign. You know the kind of sign I am talking about. It is like a "no smoking" sign, displaying a big, red circle, with a bicycle where the cigarette should be and a big red slash over it.

So, for those of you whom I've lost, let me recap. We are dealing with three inanimate objects here — a light pole, a bike, and a "no bikes" sign. That is where my general observations end and my senseless questioning nonetheless sets in.

My first question: What does this "no bikes" sign mean? Obviously to some extent, it means "no bikes." But does it mean, "Hey! Don't ride your bike in this area"? Or does it mean. "Hey! Don't chain your bike to this pole"? Assuming the first answer is viable, I guess it is OK that the bike is chained to the pole, as long as the person who chained the bike to the pole did not RIDE the bike to the pole (which is highly possible since bike riders have been seen turning into bike walkers all over campus). However, if the second response is correct, we are dealing with a whole other set of issues altogether.

For argument's sake, and just to be on the safe side, I have decided the sign probably contains duality in its meaning. Not only does it mean. "Hey do not ride your bike here," but it probably i also means, "Do not chain your bike to this pole, regardless of whether you rode it here."

Having this established, I am ready to move on to my second and all-important question. Whose bike is this? And why does this person insist on chaining it to one of the few poles on campus that specifically prohibits bicycles?

Maybe it is just a joke. The notorious bikerider-turned-light-pole-chainer might have thought that the irony in the situation would make it incredibly funny. And if that is the case, kudos to this person, whoever they are, I did think it was funny the first time I saw it (although it caused a certain backlash of unnecessary thought on my part).

But, you know, I just can't be that trusting. Maybe it is more than just a joke. Maybe it is a foreshadowing of something deeper. The first signs of impending anarchy, a revolt against the system. "Ha, ha, you bossy, dictatorial, fun takerawayers. You can't tell me what to do with my bicycle! I'll show you who is boss on this campus..." Scary.

Or maybe, just maybe, this person simply did not notice the sign. As I said before, the pole is rather nondescript, and the sign is not unusually large, and it is not as if red is the world's most eye-catching color (Well, yeah it is, I guess, but the entire sign is not red, just the circle/slash). So maybe, just maybe, whoever is chaining their bike to this pole doesn't even realize that the pole is off limits. I mean, who would bother to take notice (except some random columnist who needed some random material to write about)?

Anyway, I am curious, and I would like to know. So if you are out there, you practical-joke-playing, riot-igniting, non-observant, bike-rider-turned pole-chainer, drop me a line. Let me know what's really up. Is it a joke? A blatant attack on conformity? Or just a simple oversight in a mad dash to class? At any rate. I salute you. It is people like you who make the world a little more interesting.

Honest cops can be found off silver screen

It sucks to be a cop.

More specifically, right now it sucks to be a cop in Cincinnati. That's the current locale of American racial tension as turbulent as that of the L.A. riots of 1992.

If you've ever spent any time in Cincinnati, you might not think of it as a scalding pressure cooker of violence and rage. A fairly conservative Midwestern metropolis, it's the kind of city you can move to without your parents freaking out that you're going into the big bad world. I know this because I applied for a job there last week, and my parents didn't freak out. Unfortunately, that same week, 19-year-old Timothy Thomas was shot by police.

police. Here we go again.

Thomas, an unarmed black man, was killed by a white officer who claims he thought Thomas was drawing a weapon. He's the 15th black male to be killed by police in Cincinnati since 1995. In the same stretch of time, not a single white man has suffered the same fate. The rest of the story has been playing out predictably.

The mayor has issued an emergency curfew, requiring citizens to stay off the streets except to go to and from work and deal with medical emergencies. And the grandest irony is that the curfew must be enforced by, you guessed it, the Cincinnati Police Department.

So now, everybody is scared of everybody, which actually just might be the human condition. In fact, it's probably even the way things have always been, although that doesn't make it any less profound of an irritation. But this is not a column about racism. This is about my favorite character in one of my favorite movies.

Paul Thomas Anderson's "Magnolia" is a big, baroque mess of a movie. It daringly tells several complicated stories, all of which eventually collide, and the best of which is about an honest cop trying to get through the day in ugly Los Angeles.

The most difficult part of watching the movie easily could be accepting the initial premise, which is that an honest, decent cop exists. And in L.A. But the movie presents the idea so effortlessly that we have to accept the possibility, and the character is so genuine that we can't help but feel for him.

During the course of one day, he finds a dead body is

CHRISTOPHER PIATT

During the course of one day, he finds a dead body in a closet, loses his gun, and experiences love at first sight with a crack addict who isn't too high to see what a good person he is. It's a full, terrifying day in which every door he knocks down could be his last because there's no way of knowing what's behind it.

Anybody who's seen the movie probably isn't likely to talk about this character. Tom Cruise's performance as a greasy sex guru is more likely to be mentioned, or the out-of-nowhere biblical ending, or Aimee Mann's songs that make up the haunting soundtrack. But it's the cop who gets me every time.

You'll be more likely to believe the whole thing if you saw Anderson's earlier film. "Boogie Nights," and were able to accept the porn stars who had hearts of gold. It's a terrible challenge to accept that people in socially objectionable positions have the best of intentions. Parenthetically, most of the people I know would trust porn stars more than they would trust the police.

So have the movies once again set us up for major disappointment? Are cops, just like sex and violence, better on the big screen than in real life?

I don't think so. While we know the idealism which calls people to their vocation can go bad faster than fresh produce, we also know everything in this life has an opposite. This includes corrupt cops, cops who use excess force and cops who don't care. Our world is not an asymmetrical one. It's just that we take the balance for Sure, I'd be scared as hell to be in Cincinnati after dark right now, and suddenly getting a job there sounds less appealing. And yes, a black/white ratio of 15 to 0 is less of a coincidence than it is terrifying racist body count. But 12 of the 15 killings involved men armed with weapons including handguns and moving vehicles, and not all of the officers in question were white. If that information usually isn't included in anti-cop rhetoric, it's because it complicates the issue, and it's easier to take sides against pure evil.

I pray I never have a job that requires packing heat, as I'd be pretty clumsy with a gun. But you can't tell me we'd be safer without the folks who are called to the job. At best, the police in this country are treated as a necessary evil. That's pretty weak at best.

We are not living in a fascist state by anybody's standard. And if some cops are racist and homophobic and violent, they are no more so than everybody else from plumbers to presidents.

It sucks to be a cop. But it sucks more not to trust

No court-martial for sub captain

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The three admirals on the Navy's court of inquiry into the USS Greeneville's sinking of a Japanese fishing vessel have unanimously recommended that the submarine's skipper not be tried by a court-martial, The New York Times reported Sunday.

Instead, the skipper, Cmdr. Scott Waddle, is likely to face a lesser form of punishment, such as a punitive letter or reprimand, the Times said. citing unnamed senior Pentagon

A reprimand effectively would end Waddle's career and could reduce his retirement benefits. But it would not result in a jail sentence, as a court-martial could.

The Navy's chief spokesman. Rear Adm. Stephen Pietropaoli, said

Sunday he could not confirm the report.

"I don't know it to be true," Pietropaoli said. "Am I surprised? No."

Various media reports last week said that the panel was split in its recommendation, with one report saying it was unlikely Waddle would face a court-martial. Military officials did not comment on those reports.

On Feb. 9, the Greeneville surfaced beneath the Japanese fishing vessel the Ehime Maru near Honolulu while conducting a rapid-ascent drill for 16 civilian guests. Nine people on the boat were killed in the accident.

The collision strained relations between Japan and the United States and prompted criticism of a Navy public relations program that allows civilians on submarines at sea. Sixteen civilians were on the Greeneville, two of them at key controls, during the collision. A panel of three admirals delivered its findings and recommendations regarding the collision to Adm. Thomas Fargo, the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, in a meeting at Pearl Harbor on Friday. The Navy said the report would not be made public until Fargo decides what discipline, if any, Waddle and the submarine's other officers should face.

Waddle's civilian attorney, Charles Gittins, said he does not expect to see the report until Fargo reaches a

He said Friday he has told the Navy that the skipper would accept nonjudicial punishment and intends to retire from the Navy as soon as the disciplinary issues have been resolved. But he said he thinks Waddle does not deserve to be courtmartialed.

Robotic arm to be taken to international space station

■ Canada's contribution to Alpha to be delivered following launch Thursday.

By MARCIA DUNN

The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - A robotic inchworm - all 693 inches of it - is about to climb all the way to the international space station.

It is the most visibly high-tech, sci-fi piece of the space station jigsaw puzzle to date: a billiondollar construction crane that has a hand on each end and is capable of walking across the orbiting complex, end over end, in inchwormlike fashion.

It can touch via force-sensing mechanisms and see via cameras and computers. It also has a selfprotective mechanism to prevent it from banging into itself.

Even normally stoic NASA engineers are wowed as Thursday's launch approaches.

"We get a little bit jaded," said. the lead flight director, Phil Engelauf. But the robotic arm really does capture people's imagination.

"This is not a bunch of cans that just sit there hooked up to the station. This thing moves, It crawls around," Engelauf said. "This is space stuff."

The 57-foot, 9-inch, jointed crane is called the Big Arm. to distinguish it from the Little Arm that stretches 50 feet, 3 inches and flies on NASA's space shuttles. Ithas 14-inch biceps and seven joints: three at the shoulder, three at the wrist and one at the elbow. The joints can rotate plus or minus 270 degrees, providing more range of motion than a human arm.

One of the two hands must be plugged into one of the sockets on the space station at all times for the arm to come alive with power and computer data. Fingers will be added on a later mission. The arm, made of high-strength aluminum, stainless steel and graphite epoxy, is so heavy - 3,618 pounds - that it cannot support its own weight on Earth. For testing, it had to be disconnected at the elbow and supported with a massive rig. It is Canada's major contribution to space station Alpha.

The shuttle's Little Arm will hook the Big Arm to the space station. Once the Big Arm is unfolded by spacewalking astronauts and grabs onto its proper space station berth, it will hand its 3,000-pound packing crate to the Little Arm. The Little Arm will put the crate back in the shuttle for return to Earth.

That handshake is sure to be the highlight of the 11-day shuttle mission. Canadian astronaut Chris Hadfield said he sees it as a symbolic baton pass between the to attach solar wings in 2002 and 2003, since the shuttle arm does not have the reach for those jobs.

The arm eventually will have a rail car to move over greater distances and, hopefully, will relieve astronauts of potentially risky spacewalking chores outside the space station.

"It's going to be real exciting to see it up there and all put together and operating after a large number of years having worked on it," Sachdev said, "It's so visible, it's so high-tech, that it's definitely a source of pride."

K-State tennis team swept in weekend match at OSU

K-State's tennis team faced its second true Big 12 test Sunday when it played at No. 15 Oklahoma State.

Unfortunately for the No. 36 Cats, OSU came out on top, 4-3.

The Cowgirls swept all three doubles matches and defeated K-State's No. 1, 2 and 5 singles players to gain the victory.

In doubles play, No. 1 pairing Alena Jecminkova and Eva Novotna' fell 8-5 to 17th ranked Maria Galoustova-Phillips and Ashleigh Dolman. That would be the closest any doubles pairing would come to Oklahoma State, as No. 2 Petra Sedlmajerova and Kathy Chuda fell 8-1 and No. 3 Hayley McIver and Paulina Castillejos dropped their match, 8-4.

In singles play, No. 1 and 2 Jecminkova and Sedlmajerova both fell in straight sets. No. 3 and 4 Novotna' and Chuda would reverse the trend by winning both their matches in two sets, but Oklahoma State would seal the win at No. 5 singles over Castillejos. The freshman did battle hard, though, pushing the match to three sets. To finish out singles play, McIver defeated Dolman in three sets.

A bright spot in the loss was McIver's victory, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"Hayley picked up a good win at No. 6," he said. "It might be the best match she's played all year."

While the Cats' second Big 12 loss of the year certainly was unpleasant, the team can take solace in its 6-1 victory Saturday over Oklahoma.

"We played a pretty solid match," Bietau said. "We did a good job of taking care of business.

Contrary to what would occur the next day. K-State swept doubles play for the third consecutive match. The Sooners' lone point came at No. 1 singles, as Viviana Mracnova defeated Jecminkova 6-2, 6-2

"We had a tough time at No. 1," Bietau said. "Mracnova did a great job, but Alena has got to adapt a little better to things."

After the weekend's play, K-State's record stands at 11-7 overall and 7-2 in the Big 12.

Cats take 2 of 3 from OU

■ Coach Clark pleased with Wildcats' recent performance.

Kansas State Collegian

Before K-State took the field Friday for its weekend series against Big 12 foe Oklahoma. Luke Robertson challenged himself.

"We need to quit making excuses and just come out here and get it done," he said. "This is our opportunity."

If anyone doubted his desire, that doubt was put to rest Friday afternoon at Frank Myers Field when the junior took the hill and stifled the Sooners in K-State's 5-3 victory to open the series.

The win was the Cats' (16-21, 6-15) first victory over Oklahoma (15-25, 9-12) since March 1999.

"We put together a complete game," Robertson said. "I went out there, and I knew I had something to prove, and I did what I always intend to do - compete and give our club a chance to win."

Robertson's 8 1/3 innings of near-shutout work from the mound in the series opener not only sealed the Wildcat win, but sent a message to the Sooners that this year's Cats were a far cry from past K-State squads, he said.

Friday's win was just the beginning of a successful weekend for K-State. After thunderstorms forced the schools into a doubleheader Sunday, the Cats took the first game 5-2 behind catalysts Pat Maloney and J.D. Loudabarger to ensure its first series win against the Sooners since 1996.

After Oklahoma starter Evan Greusel gave up three straight two-out singles in the seventh inning of game two, reliever Austin Coose gave up a three-run bomb to Maloney. The sophomore's shot was part of a four-run frame for the Cats that put the game out of reach and might have saved K-State's hope for the postseason.

"This win is big because we still have a chance to get in the Big 12 Tournament." he said. "If we can get in, you never know what can happen because we can play good ball with anybody."

Loudabarger played good ball all weekend. The senior recorded two hits in the first game, added another in the second and made plenty of stops in the field to make his presence felt on both levels.

"I'm just seeing the ball real well right now," he said, "It's looking real big to me, and defensively, it's reaction. Sometimes you're there, and you make a great play, and sometimes you're not. Luckily, I was there today, and we had players making great plays. That's the difference between winning and losing a game."

Sophomore pitcher Kevin Melcher went seven innings for K-State in game two and earned the win to even his record at 2-2 on the year, part of what head coach Mike Clark said was an impressive effort from his starting pitchers.

"The starting pitching was good this weekend," he said. "We held them to 11 runs in three games, and that's awfully good."

Though the Cats would keep OU to just five runs in the first two games, K-State surrendered six in the series finale and couldn't find an answer to Austin Mix's pitching, scoring just twice in the sophomore's first win of the year.

"Mix had that slider going. He probably threw 70 of them," Clark said. "You've got to tip your cap to him. He went out and did a heck of a job. We had a tough time picking it up the whole time."

Oklahoma squeezed four runs out of game-three starter Brock Smith in 5 1/3 innings, but his Sooner counterpart had the right stuff as K-State struck out 11 times in the Sooners.

"We came out and got two. We would have liked to get three, but we just didn't get it done," he said. "We're playing pretty well right now. I was disappointed in the last game with the errors and the strikeouts, but other than that, we're playing good ball against good teams."

Woods not best athlete despite recent success

With his victory in the Masters, Tiger Woods has become the first golfer to have all four of the PGA's majors since Bobby Jones in 1930. His feat has been compared to other great individual sports feats such as Nolan Ryan's seven no hitters, Joe DiMaggio's 56game hitting streak and Wilt Chamberlain's 100-point

DAVID PLOUS With this win, his sixth major, Woods has sparked the argument over who is the best athlete of all time. This is a very difficult question to answer and brings up a further question.

What is the definition of the" best athlete"? Is it based on how many records you set?

How many championships you win? How you compare to your peers statistically? My search for the answer has led me to the following definition for best athlete: the player who has performed at such a high level in his or her sport that his or her name and reputation transcend the athlete above all other athletes in all other

> By this definition, the best athlete can't be measured by a single feat, but by how he or she performed over the course of time and the overall effect on his or her team and sport.

In considering who I think is the best ever, I am somewhat biased toward athletes in the more "aerobic" types of sports. For example, baseball, football, basketball and

Sports like auto racing, horseback riding and tennis don't take the physical toll on a person like the others mentioned above. I still consider them, but my greatest athlete won't come from any of them (Please - nobody email me and try to say that three hours in a race car can, in any way, compare to the physical abuse of playing offensive tackle for four quarters or throwing 100 pitches in 90degree heat. I don't care if those cars don't have air conditioning or CD players. They still don't compare)

Getting back to the subject at hand, Woods has accomplished a lot, and remember, he's just 25. He is the best golfer in the world right now, hands down.

However, his dominance doesn't even qualify him as the best golfer of all time, let alone best athlete of all time. Not taking anything away from Tiger, but let's wait until he has reached Jack Nicklaus' record of 18 major victories before we give him the best golfer title. Even if Woods wins 30 major titles I won't consider him the best athlete ever. With respect to him, Nolan Ryan, Babe Ruth and Muhammad Ali. I agree with ESPN's Sports Century program. Michael Jordan is the best

It's hard for me to say - I never was a big Jordan fan. I grew up rooting for the Detroit Pistons (Jordan's Bulls' first big rivals) and always rooted against him, but he's the best. I think it will be hard for any athlete to captivate and amaze the whole world (not just the sports world) the way Jordan did. Hisperformances when games where on the line, in the playoffs and what he meant to the league he played in elevate him over any other athlete, in any time period.

Look at the Jordanless NBA - nobody cares about it, MJ's possible rumored return is the biggest story in the NBA this season.

One guy you won't find cracking anybody's top 50 athletes is the Royals' new closer, Roberto Hernandez. He blew a three-run lead Saturday and loaded the bases in the ninth before getting the save Sunday. Hernandez is the highest paid player on the team! He has two saves this year, but he's blown just as many. And he's the Royals' big off-season pick-up?

Legislature looks to weaken its lobbyist disclosure laws

The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Many legislators have experienced buyers' remorse for months, and their discomfort may yet change the state's lobbyist disclosure laws.

Last year, lawmakers approved and Gov. Bill Graves signed a proposal to strengthen those laws. The changes took effect July 1 and required lobbyists to report the names of legislators and legislative staff who receive their gifts and meals, and the value.

But in January, before the law had been in effect seven months, many legislators began making plans to change it. They viewed it as too burdensome and said it focused too much attention on the trivial interactions of daily legislative life.

The House approved a proposal to lessen the disclosure requirements, and the Senate Elections and Local Government Committee drafted its own alternative. The committee's plan will be awaiting debate when the Legislature reconvenes April 25.

GOP leaders haven't yet scheduled that debate, and some senators have misgivings about tinkering with lobbying laws. However, even those who think the Legislature should wait to consider changes believe their colleagues still desire change.

"I think the same concerns are there that members always had," Sen. Derek Schmidt, R-Independence, said.

Last year, supporters of increased lobbyist disclosure, including Graves, said the new law would give Kansans more information about how special interests are trying to influence policy making.

While that has happened, there's strong evidence that the changes have led to less hospitality from lobby-ists for legislators.

According to figures compiled by the Kansas Governmental Ethics Commission, lobbyists reported spending almost $492,000 in 2000, most of it on meals, snacks and drinks for legislators, their spouses, their staffs and other officials.

That's about $139,000, or 22 percent below 1999s total reported spending of nearly $631,000. It also was the lowest figure since 1988, when lobbyists spent about $450,000.

Spending from May 1 through Dec. 31 was $69,349 — about 36 percent of the more than $188,000 spent during those same eight months in 1999.

Also, lobbyist spending for January and February of this year was about $262,000, almost $10,000, or 4 percent, behind last year's total of $272,000 for the same two months.

"There are a lot of legislators who are nervous about having meals reported," said Rep. Tony Powell, R-Wichita, chairman of the House Ethics and Elections Committee. "In turn, lobbyists know legislators are reticent and aren't offering to take them out as much."

The House's proposal on lobbying would change the law so that lobbyists would not have to itemize the meals they provide to individual legislators if those meals are worth less than $25. Small gifts under $15 also wouldn't have to be reported.

In both cases, lobbyists still would have to report their total spending on gifts and food and beverage.

The House plan expands an exemption in the current law that doesn't require itemized reporting of meals when they are served at events to which all legislators or an entire Republican or Democratic caucus is invited.

The proposal also would exempt meals served at meetings of county legislative delegations, events open to the general public or events sponsored by groups such as the National Conference of State Legislatures.

such as the National Conference of State Legislatures.

The Senate committee found the House's bill too broad.

Instead, it endorsed a bill that bans all gifts worth more than $5 and requires the reporting of meals and snacks worth more than $15. It also contains a provision designed to prevent lobbyist from getting around the reporting requirement by assigning costs from an expensive meal to several clients.

But some senators, like Schmidt, question the need for a change. Gov. Graves also has been skeptical.

"I do think it would be better to wait. Otherwise, you're just going to get into tinkering with it every year." Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer said.

Still, supporters of change, like Powell, remain hopeful they can push a bill through.

Redistricting worries lawmakers

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Reps.
Maurice Hinchey, Gary Ackerman and Nydia Velazquez usually are on the receiving end of a lobbyist's pitch.
Now, the New York Democrats, trying to hang on to their jobs, are the ones hiring the lobbyists.

In an unusual, perhaps unprecedented attempt at political selfpreservation, the three are paying lobbyists to try to persuade state lawmakers to retain their three congressional districts when new election lines are redrawn based on the 2000 Census. "I think only people who don't treasure their jobs have no concerns" about redistricting, Ackerman said.

Members of Congress from other states, like Michigan and Mississippi, also are increasing their profiles back home.

Hinchey hired the former top aide to the New York Assembly speaker, at a cost of $3,000 a month from campaign funds, and said he "thought it would be a good idea to have someone who would be looking out for my interests in Albany."

Every 10 years, state legislatures must redraw congressional lines to reflect changing populations documented by the census. In most states, governors have to sign off on the plans.

Politics alone do not determine the outcome. Federal law and court decisions require map-drawers to consider not only census numbers but race, ethnicity, geography and history. So it is not unusual for the political districts to end up in court if someone believes those factors were not properly weighed.

Ten states are losing seats and eight are gaining them based on their populations. Both parties are monitoring redistricting and spending millions to try to influence it.

Midwest states continue to battle recent flooding

The Associated Press

GRAND FORKS, N.D. - The swollen Red River dropped slowly Sunday along the Minnesota-North Dakota state line, where cities frantically have reinforced dikes against

However, the river is expected to stay high and above flood stage for several days, said Lynn Kennedy, a senior hydrological technician for the National Weather Service.

"It's just been a very slow minimal drop, more like holding steady than anything else," Kennedy said.

Elsewhere across the Midwest, communities in wide areas of Minnesota waited to see if their sandbag levees would hold as the Minnesota, St. Croix and other rivers continued rising. Parks along the Wisconsin bank of the Mississippi had been closed and residents of lowlying sections of lowa's Mississippi shore had started sandbagging and moving belongings to high ground.

More than 300 volunteers were called out Sunday at Granite Falls, Minn., after a 100-foot crack was found in a levee. Although the dike wasn't leaking, the Minnesota River quickly was eroding its earthen sides. Mayor Dave Smiglewski said.

"At this point, we're doing OK, but things are iffy," Smiglewski said.

The Red River had dropped 3 inches Sunday at Fargo and by an inch at Grand Forks to 44.7 feet. Kennedy said.

"It could fluctuate around those Forks in 1997, the year it forced residents virtually to empty the city.

More than half of Minnesota's counties have reported some level of flooding. Only a few homes have been evacuated, but many of the state's rivers have yet to crest, including the Mississippi.

"When these rivers peak, it's not like a roller coaster that shoots up and down. The crest can last for days,' said Kevin Smith, spokesman for the state Public Safety Department.

Along the eastern edge of Minnesota, prison inmates were sent to Stillwater to help sandbag along the St. Croix River, which rose 6 inches overnight, said Tim Thomsen, city public works superintendent.

The Mississippi had covered boat landings and parks in Wisconsin and is forecast to crest Wednesday at nearly 17 feet at La Crosse, where some residents have evacuated voluntarily. The record there is 17.9 feet, set in 1969.

"It's starting to go faster." La Crosse Emergency Management Coordinator Al Spaulding said. "It's still going up."

Farther downstream, the Mississippi reached 16.1 feet Sunday. at Burlington, Iowa, where flood stage is 15 feet, and it is expected to crest at 19 to 21 feet April 26 or 27.

Lowland residents near Burlington moved personal belongings Saturday and volunteers, city crews and homeowners started piling sandbags there and at Davenport, Iowa.

Davenport plans a 3 1/2-foot-high wall of sandbags to protect its

"I had one guy ask if you could fry up the Madagascar cockroaches, and that struck me as a little strange," she said.

Upcoming events for the zoo include an Earth Day celebration scheduled from noon to 5:30 p.m. Sunday, and an event in recognition of International Migratory Bird Day from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on May 5.

The focus of these events usually is kept on education and conservation, Bauer said.

"We've made it our mission to inspire conservation by telling people about ways to help out in preservation and help them understand why they should," she to a world of movies, music and poor culture in general that is duranteed more by the Big Mac than a hard gullar, it seems strange that the messenger of individuality at least would attempt to come in the form of a movie written for 13-year-old girls.

This might be giving the movie too much credit for something that developed more as an accident from a substandard plot. Even so, the movie is fun to see. The sweet rock sounds of the Pussycats are just how they should sound: catchy and vibrant, so the soundtrack almost has more appeal than the actual movie.

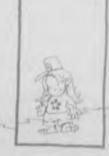

Backed up by a well-tailored cast. the movie maintains the feel of the old comic book with Alan Cumming and Parker Posey providing a backbone of talent for the evil side. In the end, the movie is bubble gum with too much advertising. It's more clever than most movies, and the message is a good one. So if you see it, try to have fun, and never mind that you could map out the entire plot after half an hour.

Ship smuggling Iraqi oil sinks Vatican celebrates Easter in Gulf; crews cleaning spill

By ANWAR FARUQI

The Associated Press

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates -A ship smuggling thousands of tons of Iraqi oil sank in the Persian Gulf, a U.S. Navy official said Sunday, and authorities here said some of the fuel spilled into the water.

Emergency crews were trying to contain the spill more than 24 hours after the ship sank, an official at the Dubai Port Control said Sunday. He said helicopters were at the scene, some 20 miles off the

A port official in Sharjah, an emirate about 20 miles north of Jebel Ali. said a stretch of polluted waters had been found off the coast of Sharjah.

The Georgian-flagged vessel went down Saturday near Dubai's Jebel Ali port with 3,850 tons of fuel oil on board, said Cmdr. Jeff Gradeck, spokesman for the Navy's Bahrain-based 5th Fleet.

The Emirate's Federal Environmental Agency, however, put the fuel figure at only 1,430 sank," he said. After the ship was damaged by rough waves, two U.S. ships in the area helped the 11-member Iraqi crew stabilize the vessel, he said. But by Saturday afternoon, the ship began sinking, Gradeck said, adding that the Emirates' coast guard rescued the crew.

Under sanctions imposed by the United Nations following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990, Iraq can sell oil only on condition that most of the proceeds are used to meet Iraqis' basic needs.

Oil smuggled out outside the socalled oil-for-food deal - and the vessels carrying the illegal shipments - are auctioned off.

Ships loaded with smuggled Iraqi oil routinely pass through the waters off the Emirates. But after an oil barge believed to be carrying Iraqi fuel spilled fuel off the Emirates in 1998 and contaminated some nine miles of coastline, the Emirates launched a crackdown on sanctions-busting tankers.

VATICAN CITY - Frail, and at moments even wobbly, John Paul II expressed hope Sunday that the message of Easter can inspire humanity to defeat evil and bring peace to the Middle East, the Balkans, Africa and other places plagued by violence.

"Men and women of the third millennium, the Easter gift of light that scatters the darkness of fear and sadness is meant for everyone," John Paul said near the end of a two-hour ceremony in St. Peter's Square, where close to 100,000 people braved unusually chilly weather for a Roman spring.

"Rediscover with joy and wonder that the world is no longer a slave to the inevitable. The world of ours can change: peace is possible even fighting and death," the pontiff said, naming the Holy Land, Jerusalem, the Balkans, Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Age and physical ailments have taken their toll on the pope, who turns 81 next month. As he made his way to the altar on the steps of St. Peter's Basilica. John Paul at one point swayed and appeared to lose his balance. Two aides quickly grabbed his arms and steadied

Sunday's late-morning Mass was the last in a series of taxing Holy Week appearances for John Paul that included a long, late night Saturday vigil service that took place in the basilica instead of inthe square because of the rain.

For the first time, John Paul walked and carried a cross for only a very small part of the Good Friday

Intervals between public ceremonies also were lengthened to give the pontiff more time to rest.

An arm tremor, a shuffling walk and slurred words - symptoms of Parkinson's disease - have troubled the pontiff for several years, But on Sunday, his voice rang, out strong and clear during his traditional Easter reflection on the world's trouble spots. He prayed that "this commitment of ours will not falter, even when weariness slows our steps."

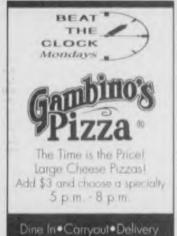

He followed the "Urbi et Orbi" (Latin for "to the city and to the world') Easter message by wishing the world happy Easter in 61 languages

By the end of the ceremony, the crowd had swelled to about 100,000 as tourists and Romans spilled over from the square.

Rioting in Cincinnati slows; curfew extended

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI - The mayor rolled back the city's dusk-to-dawn curfew Sunday in response to a calm night following the funeral of a young black man whose shooting triggered a week of unrest.

Mayor Charles Luken said the curfew will start at 11 p.m. instead of 8 p.m. to allow families more time to celebrate Easter together.

"Hopefully, today can be a day of prayer. A day of peace. A day of coming together," Luken said.

The April 7 death of Timothy Thomas, 19, led to three days of rioting in predominantly black neighborhoods that stopped when the mayor instituted the curfew Thursday.

Thomas, who was wanted on 14 warrants for misdemeanors and traffic violations, was unarmed when he was shot while running from police. He is the fourth black man killed by police since November in this city of 331,000 -43 percent of which is black.

Stephen Roach, the officer who shot Thomas, is on paid adminis-

Overnight Saturday, police arrested 187 people for curfew violations and got calls about shots being fired, and sporadic instances of rocks and bottles being thrown at police cruisers.

"It was almost a boring night for us," police Chief Thomas Streicher said.

Since Thomas' death, more than 700 people have been arrested for looting, arson, vandalism and curfew violations.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, who cut short a trip to Africa to fly to Cincinnati, said Sunday that the federal government must take a leadership role in improving relationships between city police departments and blacks, and that President Bush must get involved.

"He has a crisis in his country," said the Baptist minister, a leading critic of New York City police's violent confrontations with blacks. "It's time for a national response and real change, not just telling us to quiet down."

Later in the day, Sharpton led mourners in prayer at the site where Thomas was shot and urged that justice be done.

Minutes after Sharpton stood at the spot where Thomas was shot,

Thomas' brother Terry, 17, walked up and touched the concrete wall where someone had spray-painted "RIP Tim." Others hugged him as he looked down at the flowers, Bible, football and other items that well-wishers had left on the ground.

On Saturday, hundreds of protesters marched through the riot-scarred Over-the-Rhine neighborhood after the funeral.

Four people were injured by crowd-control bean bags shot by police and State Highway Patrol officers, but the march was otherwise peaceful. Police and the FBI were investigating why officers also shot bean bags at a group milling on streets shortly after the funeral ended.

"We don't feel completely like this is over. We recognize that in certain parts of the city tensions still are a little high," Luken said.

NAACP President Kweisi Mfume and Keith Fangman, president of the local police union, appeared on "Fox News Sunday" and ABC's "This Week With Sam Donaldson and Cokie Roberts" to debate the deaths of 15 blacks by police since 1995.

Fangman said 12 deaths involved suspects who confronted police with deadly weapons. He questioned Mfume on whether police officers should have the right to use deadly force in a lifethreatening situation.

"Do you believe that when an unarmed suspect is running from police, has no weapon, makes no deadly moves, should be shot down in a dark alley like a dog, like a pig, like an animal?" Mfume said.

Lt. Col. Ron Twitty, the police department's highest-ranking black official, said the racial problems that have been stirred up should be solved at the local not national - level.

"The decisions about quality of life in Cincinnati should be made by our leadership in Cincinnati, our city government," he said.

Last-minute tax filers await refund checks

April Dawson, senior in horticulture, makes last minute adjustments to her tax forms before she drops them in the mall Monday.

Kansas State Collegian

It was a tense day for Travis Lutz as he waited for the mail to arrive Monday. His completed tax forms were to arrive, and this was his last day to file his taxes.

Lutz, senior in civil engineering, was awaiting his completed tax forms, which he had his sister - an accountant in Durango, Colo. - do for him. When the forms did not arrive Saturday, he became worried.

"I was really kind of concerned. I guess you have got to pay a big fine," he said.

According to an Internal Revenue Services Web site, if a person is receiving a refund, there is no penalty for late-filing. A penalty is based on the unpaid taxes as of the due date of the return, the Web site www.irs.gov said under its frequently asked questions page.

This turned out to be the case for Lutz, who will be receiving a refund.

"I am very happy about it. It looks like I will be getting quite a bit of money back," he said.

Lutz, though, wasn't alone in filing late. In the United States, there are an estimated 26 million filers who faced a deadline similar to Lutz. It left the Manhattan Post Office with a steady stream of customers throughout the day. Postmaster Marvin Roth said it is one of the busiest days of the year. It ranks up there with Valentine's Day and Mother's Day, he said.

However, Marlo Montague, a postal worker, said Valentine's Day is not quite as busy.

"It is a little busier than Valentine's Day because most people don't send greeting cards through certified mail," Montague said.

Postal workers worked until 5 p.m.

Travelers to Mexico warned of disease

By NANCY HULL Kansas State Collegian

Some U.S. college students who traveled to Acapulco, Mexico, during spring break might have contracted a respiratory infection.

centers earlier this month after an outbreak of the illness was reported to the CDC.

Dr. E.J. Reppert. Lafene Health Center medical director and physician, said he is aware of at least 20 K-State students who visited Acapulco in March, and he has not seen symptoms of the illness in any of the students.

The illness, which is caused by the fungal pathogen Histoplasma capsulatum, usually is a mild illness that acts like a cold and can be accompanied by a cough, fever, muscle aches, headaches and sometimes chest pains. Symptoms occur one to three weeks after exposure. Students who sought medical care had severe symptoms that included high fever for at least three days, shortness of breath and symptoms of a severe systemic illness.

Only about one in 50,000 people develop a severe form of the disease Histoplasmosis, which primarily affects the lungs. People with HIV or those who are immune suppressed are more likely to suffer from the disease. When the CDC first contacted Reppert, there were two U.S. students with histoplasmosis, and he said he hasn't heard about more cases of the disease.

The CDC's investigation of this outbreak is unusual, Reppert said.

"This is the first time I recall this happening," said Reppert, who has worked at Lafene for seven years.

The infection is contracted by inhalation of spores that live in soil contaminated by bird droppings, and it's not contagious. The source of exposure has not yet

Heather Thomas, freshman in dietetics, attends Easter Service on Sunday morning at Mill Creek Community Church in Shawnee, Kan., with her parents Sherri and Larry Thomas.

Fighting the daily fight

Freshman overcomes life-expectancy odds of cystic fibrosis

Since Heather Thomas was 3, she and her parents have dealt with the reality that she has the chronic genetic disorder cystic fibrosis that causes most children not to live past high school.

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

While many freshmen consider completing their first year in college a success in itself, for Heather Thomas, it means much more.

Thomas, freshman in dietetics, not only is finishing classes, but she also is fighting a life-threatening disease.

Since she was 3 years old, she and her parents have dealt with the reality that Thomas has cystic fibrosis - a disorder that preys only on children and causes most not to live past high school. It's a chronic genetic disorder that affects the lungs and digestive tract.

When we first discovered she had the disease, it was a blow to us because all the information we had at the time showed kids only living to 7 or 8 years old," Larry Thomas, Heather's father, said. "That was devastating, Since the Thomas family was given the diagnosis, there have been significant improvements in treatments and medication. This includes the recent discovery of the cystic fibrosis gene, which Thomas said is a big step toward finding a cure.

Although Thomas' case isn't as severe as some, she still must fight the daily fight.

"In the beginning, you go through grief because the statistics are so terrible," Sherri Thomas, Heather's mother, said. "You think she's not even going to make it past kindergarten, and when she graduated from high school, we were like 'Wow.'

Knowing the outcome of her disease is overwhelming at times, Thomas said.

"I started having problems with my lungs at 13, but it hasn't caused a lot of problems in my life," Heather said. "The biggest struggle was realizing when I was 10 what CF was and what it meant - the life expectancy." Every morning, she must loosen the mucous in her lungs

Newly elected officials enter city service

Reorganization of the Manhattan City Commission will top the agenda of tonight's first meeting of the new group.

Mark Taussig and Brad Everett will take seats as newly elected commissioners, Roger Reitz will take seat after being re-elected, and Bruce Snead and Ed Klimek, both incumbents, will be elected to mayor and mayor pro-tem, respectively.

After inductions, the issue of super duplexes will top the general agenda.

"This is an issue that came up as a result of tight housing in the community," Diane Stoddard, assistant city manager, said. "The term 'super duplexes' is derived from current structures that take up nearly all the development lot area."

The duplexes are in areas that now allow duplex development, but the concern is that these structure are taking up the maximum allotted amount for the lots, Stoddard said.

"Especially in the south Manhattan area, we are hearing some concerns from neighbors," she said. "They are usually concerned from an asthetic and practical standpoint. These structures typically appeal to a number of students, which means more vehicles and people in a smaller area."

The planning board has recommended Conditional Use, which means those that meet current criteria and are wanting to build a duplex will have to get approval from the Board of Zoning to obtain a building permit, Snead

"It gives the city a chance to notify all property owners within 200 feet of the proposed location of the structure," he said. "This just creates awareness of the issue and lets the community voice their concerns and support."

Snead said he is unsure of how the commission will vote because of the new body.

"I don't want to prejudge the commissioners," he said. "I think we will look at the issue fairly and precisely."

McCulloh said women in government are concerned with different issues than men.

News of the Weird

A team of researchers from the Netherlands' Delft University of Technology announced in December that after nearly four years of research, it had solved the perplexing problem of how to store and pour draft beer on zerogravity space stations. The team injects carbon dioxide against a flexible membrane inside the keg, which forces the beer out without commingling the liquid and the gas (as is done in the conventional keg) and provides the additional benefit of ejecting the beer in liquid chunks the size of tabletennis balls.

Oklahoma City bombing accomplice hearing set

OKLAHOMA CITY - A judge on Monday set a May 21 preliminary hearing date to determine whether convicted Oklahoma City bombing conspirator Terry Nichols should be tried on state murder charges

State District Judge Ray Dean Linder said he wants to conclude the hearing by June 15. Nichols is charged with 160 counts of firstdegree murder in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which resulted in 168 deaths.

The date was set after defense attorney Brian Hermanson said he would not be ready by a suggested hearing date of May 7. Hermanson also said it would be inappropriate to begin May 17, because it would be the day after the scheduled execution of convicted Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh.

"We're talking about a delay of at most two weeks," Hermanson said. "The two weeks mean a significant amount to us.'

Hermanson also said he is appealing Linder's refusal last month to dismiss the charges. Nichols claimed he should not be return of Navy aircraft WASHINGTON, D.C. -American negotiators will press for prompt return of a detained Navy surveillance plane when they meet with Chinese officials Wednesday in Beijing.

On the eve of the talks, the Bush administration ventured no prediction on the outcome. But State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Monday that the Chinese government had advised that the talks would be "nonpolemical," meaning businesslike and not marked by harsh rhetoric.

The U.S. delegation will insist on a prompt return of the plane and also talk to the Chinese about ways to avert further collisions, Boucher said.

The EP-3E aircraft was seized by Chinese authorities after an emergency landing April I on Hainan island in southern China. The crew was released last week after protracted negotiations.

There have been no U.S. surveillance flights since, but White House and State Department officials said they would be resumed at some point. President Bush is awaiting a recommendation from Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld on the flights, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said Monday.

"The United States will always reserve the right to operate over international waters and international airspace to protect the needs of our neighbors, promote regional stability and secure peace, which is why our nation and many other nations fly reconnaissance missions," Fleischer said.

Senate members return to plan school finances

TOPEKA - Spring break was short for the Senate Education Committee, whose members returned Monday to the Statehouse with the unfinished business of drafting a school finance package.

They were greeted with dismal state revenue estimates, a sobering history on tax cuts and a threering binder full of comments from 180 of the 304 school districts.

The message to legislators was clear: Send more help.

That message is understood. What isn't clear, legislators said, is what help can be provided.

"It is still our duty this session to do something that is responsible - something that is responsible to the schools and administrators and responsible to the taxpayers," said Chairman Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer.

With 85 days of the 90-day session completed, the committee expects to spend Monday and Tuesday searching for the right combination of programs and revenue sources to augment the state's $2.26 billion commitment to elementary, junior high and high schools.

The task comes in the wake of a $205 million shortfall in the state budget for the current year and the 2002 fiscal year beginning July 1.

Before they recessed April 6, legislators approved a $9.11 billion budget, which they knew would have to be trimmed - or new revenue sources found - to make the books balance.

Don Hochanadd, an adoptive father, speaks Monday night in Forum Hall on the effects of abortion on the availability of children to adopt. The Right to Life organization sponsored the event.

Adoption advocate speaks to KSU audience Monday

By LYNNE HERMANSEN Kansas State Collegian

A father with strong pro-life feelings addressed an audience of students Monday evening about the importance of preserving life.

"I am here to save lives," Don Hochanadd, a practicing attorney, said. "I don't think there is anything more rewarding or worthwhile than saving a life"

Hochanadd presented a speech advocating adoption as the alternative to abortion in Forum Hall of the K-State Student Union. The speech was sponsored by the Right to Life organization.

Adoption is an issue close to Hochanadd's own life — he adopted his oldest son through Catholic Charities in 1966.

"It should be looked at because it allows the baby to live and takes away the guilt from the mother," he said. "We are eternally grateful for having that ability to adopt. Mistakes are going to be made. Don't kill them. Put them up for adoption."

Presently, adoption has more complications than it did in 1966, Hochanadd said

"Forget it. Today, all babies are killed," he said. "Your chances are next to nothing."

When asked from an audience member how the pro-life movement could best further its efforts, Hochanadd responded with the answer of prayer.

"Pray hard and pray often. There are peaceful ways to fight," he said. "God can do anything. We just have to want it bad enough."

Hochanadd showed the film "Silent Scream" to give audience members an understanding of the abortion procedures.

"When the life is thought of as a fetus or an it, the life is easier to kill," he said. "Calling the life a fetus is just a way to sugarcoat the killing and reduce the guilt."

The film showed a sonogram of an abortion.

Hochanadd said he wants people to know that God can forgive every sin.

"It is between you and God." he said.

He emphasized that today's college generation has the power to make changes. "Your generation is going to have to clean up the mess. Otherwise, your children could become animals," he said.

Hochanadd gave advice to those who want to promote the pro-life movement.

"Don't be afraid to take a chance, or to be different, or to do something uncomfortable," he Melissa Linnebur, junior in English, said she feels strongly connected to the topic of adoption.

"I just had two cousins who were adopted," she said. "My cousin that was adopted in March came from a 15-year-old girl who was raped. If a girl who went through this experience can bring a baby to term, it sheds a lot of light on the issue. The adoptions have brought so much love and happiness to my family."

Molly Mersmann, senior in secondary education, said the speech was very emotional.

"He was very informative, and I wish everyone who doesn't know how they feel about abortion could watch the video," she said.

Singer/songwriter to perform at Silverado Saloon tonight

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's music scene will rise to a new level of musicianship tonight with the performance of blues and rock singer/songwriter Mark Selby at Silverado Saloon.

His name might not sound familiar, but his co-write of Billboard's 1998 Rock Track of the Year "Blue on Black" by Kenny Wayne Shepherd, and his No. 1 hit, "There's Your Trouble," recorded by the Dixie Chicks, is proof Selby is a name worth remembering.

Sharkey's Little Groove Box will be opening for Selby's band, and Blake Chaffin, guitarist for Sharkey's, said Selby's talent is one that shouldn't be missed.

"Every musician from Manhattan should be at this show to hear him play," Chaffin, senior in marketing, said. "We're such big fans of Mark that it's an honor to open for him."

Selby was born in Oklahoma, but he lived near Manhattan before moving to Nashville to pursue his music career.

"While touring through Kansas, I'm trying to reconnect with as many places as I can," Selby said,
"and the radio stations around here are also giving a lot of play time to my first single."

Jeff Hawkinson, owner of Silverado, said he is excited about the concert, and that his bar is a good place to feature musicians like Selby because it's the largest venue in Aggieville, allowing everyone to see the performer.

"Î'm a big blues fan, and I've got Selby's new CD, and it's really good," Hawkinson said. "I plan on just sitting back and enjoying the music."

The majority of the concert will be songs from Selby's new album, "More Storms Coming," but Selby said he will mix in others.

"We'll play a few popular songs from Kenny Wayne Shepherd," Selby said, "and I'll probably play some new songs I've written since my album."

Growing up in a musical family, Selby said he started playing the piano at age 5 and then played the drums, but in high school, he picked up an acoustic guitar and never put it down.

He graduated from Fort Hays State University with a degree in classical guitar and music composition and moved to Nashville to write professionally.

"My writing is inspired by life," Selby said. "It gives me a chance to express myself by soaking up life and seeing what comes out of it."

Performing live also is something Selby said he loves to do.

"Interacting with an audience is such a joyous group event," he said. "When I get to do something I love in front of people, it is just a beautiful thing."

Chaffin, a fan of Selby since his days at Fort Hays, said he thinks Selby has been successful because of his incredible attention to musical detail, but also because Selby is such a genuine person.

"He's real," Chaffin said. "He is such an idol to me because he has proven that being a nice guy and working hard does count for something in this business."

Cincinnati mayor lifts curfew

By JAMES HANNAH

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Promising to make police more accountable, the mayor lifted a citywide curfew Monday that helped end days of rioting over the police shooting of an unarmed black man.

"Now that the disturbances have subsided, they must never occur again," Mayor Charles Luken said. "We have an opportunity for a new Cincinnati."

However, the mayor did not lift a state of emergency, which allows him to impose curfews and other restrictions.

The 8 p.m.-to-6 a.m. curfew was imposed Thursday after three nights of arson, looting, attacks on white motorists and clashes with

Dozens of people were injured, more than 800 were arrested and arson damage was put at more than $200,000 in the worst racial unrest in Cincinnati since the 1968 assassination of Martin Luther King Jr.

The streets mostly were quiet over the weekend, and city officials had hoped to lift the curfew because it was hurting businesses. The curfew was scaled back to 11 p.m. Sunday to allow more time for Easter celebrations.

"If we put our heads back in the sand, that sand will once again grow hot with rage. The opportunity will be lost," said Ross Love, speaking on behalf of black community leaders.

The Rev. Damon Lynch, a black clergyman, said the city's black youths do not know how to channel their anger.

"They just feel like nobody's listening," he said. "Their anger is not just at officers, but their own black leadership. The feeling is, we're not listening, and we have to turn that around."

If my sociology teacher says "So on and so forth" one more time, I am going to lose it.

I think it's a fantastic idea that the Women's Center is offering defense courses, but I wish they were offered earlier so that I could defend myself before my roommate decided that he wanted to beat the crap out of me.

To Christopher Piatt: the cast and crew of "Fuddy Meers" would just like to thank you for being such a wonderful and inspirational person. Good luck with all you do. and we will miss you very, very much.

The Royals won? That's great, but who are the Royals?

I hate to be the bearer of bad news to the sidewalk chalkers, but hype is spelled h-y-p-e, not h-i-p-e.

To the bouncer at Bobby T's: if you are a law enforcement agent, then I am a freaking dancing frog. So give me my ID back, you jerk.

David Plous, how is baseball more aerobic than tennis? All you do is stand around, whereas you are constantly running in tennis.

To all of you wusses out there who complained because the air conditioning wasn't turned on last week like you wanted it to be, I have two things to say to you. One: that's Kansas for you. Two: ha, ha.

To the international students who told their views in Friday's article, let's get the facts straight. First, the U.S. was in an international fly zone. Second, the pilot radioed ahead six separate times to get clearance to land. Just remember, you are a welcomed guest in this country and you make us diverse, and we thank you for that. For my closing statement, God bless the United States of America.

Here is a little driving tip to all you K-State students who use the interstate. Don't drive in the left lane if the car coming up behind you is going faster than you are - unless you like to get road raged on.

I think the vandalism that is being committed in the Union Plaza is just the students' way of getting back at the administration for what we see as a waste of money when we can't afford to pay our power bills, or put decent teachers in the classrooms, or have enough sections of class that students who need that class for graduation can actually get into and complete the requirements. I think it is ridiculous.

Question for Thursday: How do you think the honor policy is affecting cheating?

KEEPING TH

Bush's plan has bias toward select religious groups

There has been a great deal of controversy in the last month over President Bush's much-touted plan to supply government funding to faith-based organizations for the purpose of developing and maintaining community outreach programs. Bush's public relations staff says the proposed $250 billion spending bill is part of the administration's efforts to practice "compassionate conser-

One problem with Bush's proposal is the fact that giving government funding to faithbased organizations actually raises more problems than it solves. Some of these problems have been highlighted by the results of recent polls.

For example, a poll conducted in late March by the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press and the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life turned up several very enlightening numbers. According to CNN.com, 75 percent of those surveyed believe in the concept of faithbased organizations receiving federal monies in exchange for ministering to MICAH HAWKINSON their communities. Here's the catch; most of the respondents were very selective about who should get the money. After all, we can't have our government funding anything sponsored by wacky religions like The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints or Islam or Scientology. That would, of course, be un-American.

It would seem public opinion is at least temporarily against nontraditional (read: "kooky" religions getting federal funds for outreach projects. This might make passage of Bush's proposal much more difficult even with a Republican majority in the legislature.

Then there's the issue of how the funds would be distributed. You can't just go around and hand out money at random to various churches, synagogues. mosques, oak trees or other places of worship. There would have to be a careful auditing process in place in order to avert the corruntion that inevitably comes with the availability of federal funds. There also would have to be an equitable distribution based (presumably) on quantitative performance. In the common vernacular, this means, "Doing good = Mo" money.

CNN.com reports that "the administration would ... impose annual audits to ensure that funds did not continue to go to groups whose programs failed."

This means that, in effect, the federal government would have a sort of stranglehold over faith-based entities that receive public lunds. If a certain group's efforts were judged by a government auditor to be ineffective. that group would lose federal funding. This would place the group at a relative disadvantage to other similar groups.

Aside from the questions of who would get the money and how it would be distributed. there remains what I believe to be the single-most significant problem with Bush's plan: the fact that it involves faith-based organizations.

The most basic concept of the vast majority of faith-based organizations is - get this faith. One common definition of the word "faith" is "the assurance of things hoped for and the evidence of things unseen."

This implies a trust in some natural (or at least intangible) power to provide for the needs of the organization. Government subsidies totally undermine the concept of faith in faith-based charities. After all, why bother having faith in any kind of supernatural power when you're being fed by the Almighty Hand of a Benevolent, Big-Brotherly government? Without the excitement of raising support and the necessity to share their visions with other people, the workers of faith-based organizations will become mere bureaucrats. The fire will go out of their ministries and leave hollow. empty infrastructures for distributing government money

What kinds of guidelines will the feds put in place for the proposed program? Will they make every participating church add another commandment to the decalogue? Maybe something along the lines of, 'Thou shalt pray toward the District of Columbia three times a day or be red pens to mark your paperwork, have spoken! So let it be done in accordance with prophecy."

Heck, maybe they'll even change the Pater Noster a little bit. "Yeah, we don't really need our daily bread today because the government's taking care of us now. But still forgive us our debts, because we sure as Washington don't have any surplus money to pay off the trillions of dollars that our nation owes to other

Recent suicide unearths former emotions

Drew Cobb's death made me think of things I wish I didn't have to remember.

I remember lying on the floor about to pass out from the pills I had taken and thinking I didn't really want to die that I didn't know Drew Cobb or what he was thinking the day he died. I don't know his family and friends or how they feel.

However, I know what it is to be on the brink, and I know what it feels like to lose friends to suicide

I often hear people ask how could someone do this to himself or herself.

To begin to understand, you have to know people who kill themselves are often sick.

I was suffering from depression when I tried to kill myself the evening of Easter Sunday four years ago.

The disease, which is an illness just like diabetes, Parkinson's or cancer, robs you of your ability to put life in perspective. You are in so much emotional pain that you would do almost anything to make it

It is like the wolf gnawing off its own leg to save itself from the trap. The person who has depression cannot conceive of his or her release from the trap or respite from the pain.

I was terrified of telling anyone about what was happening to me. I was ashamed.

human frailty.

Despite what I have learned about mental illness through education and personal experience, it did not prepare me for the deaths by suicide of two of my friends in 1998.

I had just come back from a trip when I learned Laurie had committed suicide.

My mind jumped back to the long string of answering machine messages I had hastily dispatched the night before. Could one of those hang-up calls have been Laurie?

I knew I could have done nothing to prevent her death. She was sick, but I blamed myself anyway.

Although it is clouded by depression, suicide is a choice. As much as we care for our loved ones, we only can offer support.

The choice to seek help - the choice to live - lies with the individual.

If we can salvage anything from the deaths of our loved ones or our personal pain, it is to create an environment in which people who are afflicted with this horrible disease can find help.

If you need help and feel you can't talk with a professional, go to a friend or family member first. Take someone with you to your first appointment.

If you are in immediate danger, call a crisis or suicide hotline. If you can't do that, just go to the emergency room. Hospitals are equipped to deal with mental illness emergencies.

Sometimes I think about the things I would have missed if I had gone through with my plans - fresh strawberries, meeting people, the Grand Canyon, my family.

A therapist once told me there was nothing that couldn't be fixed or dealt with except being dead. Take care of your mental by coughing and taking hot showers. Then, every time she eats, she must take a pill to help digest her food. This is because the disease blocks her pancreas, prohibiting enzymes from entering the stomach to break down food.

This part of the disease has caused Thomas to be underweight alarmingly, at times. Her diet is heavy in cheese, milkshakes and sweets. To maintain a healthy weight, she has to consume an average of 3,000 calories per day. Even then, she said that's a struggle.

"I can't ever completely digest all my food, and it's hard to gain weight," she said.

However, Thomas said she considers herself fortunate because she's met others with the disorder who have spent their entire lives in and out of hospitals. She has only been in the hospital three times since she was in eighth grade.

Recently, Thomas was forced to confront the harshness of the disease when two of her friends died from it. Their deaths were very sobering for Thomas, her mother said. Both were only 16 years old.

"It was very sad, and it kind of hit closer to home for me," Thomas said. "It made me think of my own situation, but I didn't let myself get taken by it."

To keep herself healthy, Thomas is very diligent in her treatments. food and exercise. She said this taking care of herself - is a big factor in how the disease plays out.

Besides her morning routine. Thomas also has a night routine. She spends about an hour doing a variety of breathing treatments as well as chest therapy. The chest therapy involves a vest that is hooked up to an air compressor. The compressor then rapidly pumps air in and out of her lungs.

Besides her daily routines, Thomas has to go to the Cystic Fibrosis Clinic at Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, Mo., about every three months and before she goes on any big trips.

There, the doctor performs tests that indicate her lung capacity and whether there are any blocked airwaves. The results determine Thomas' activity.

"If they're good, he'll let me do everything I want," she said. "If they're not so good, then I have to go to the hospital and be put on an IV or on antibiotics."

Larry Thomas said as long as his daughter maintains a great level of health and stays on top of her treatments, she has a good chance of seeing adulthood.

Brooke White, senior in family studies and a friend of Thomas', met her in August. Since then, White said her admiration for her has grown.

"It's hard to accept that someone who has so much life in them has an uncertain future," she said, "Yet, she's so courageous and willing to step out of her comfort zone and not hold back on life at all.

At first, the Thomases were reluctant about their daughter's going away to school.

'After 15 or 16 years of coping with the disease, we're used to it, but we were concerned with her being in a dorm and away from home and not taking care of herself." Larry Thomas said.

Thomas proved her parents wrong, "At Christmas, her doctor was just amazed because her lung capacity is still very good," Sherri said. "He said he has never had a student go away to school and come back healthier. K-State has been an absolute, wonderful experience for her."

TOTAL TO THE STATE OF THE STATE

Larry Thomas said his daughter always has been a strong individual, and that her attitude has contributed to that.

"I don't know that Heather has ever let this disease get her down," Larry said.

Her mother said her positive outlook and determination come from her faith in God.

"She understands God has a purpose for her life, and she makes the best of it," she said.

Larry Thomas said he thinks Thomas' fair health over the years is due to that faith.

"I really, honestly believe that prayer has sustained her and kept her healthy," he said.

As for Thomas' future, she has begun making plans for after college.

"I'd like to do diet consultation out of my home, and I also want to do studies on cystic fibrosis," she She's also planning a trip to east Asia this summer for eight weeks.

One commitment she has made is to participate in the Cystic Fibrosis Walk in Manhattan on May 5. She is one of the team leaders who will help raise money for the cystic fibrosis foundation.

"I'm involved because I want to find a cure," she said.

As her disease progresses and new treatments are discovered, the Thomases will continue to hope.

'As parents, we are hopeful that hers might be the generation that sees a cure," Sherri Thomas said.

at the windows, and Roth said the tax-day stress has decreased over his 19 years at the post office as a result of different ways to file. Roth also said the post office did close at normal times because it already was a day later than

On the other end of the tax scope, workers at H&R Block said they were swamped with walk-in tax filers whose first stop was the store. The business had lines all day, and Jessica Breault, junior at Manhattan High School, waited for two hours and said it was her only option.

"I can't really do them myself," she said.

Breault's late filing was due to a mixup on who exactly was filing her taxes, and she spent Monday filing her taxes. She was not alone, as those in line at the Manhattan Post Office discussed everything from the line's pace to the subject of tax cuts.

However, those filing late said they liked the idea of a tax cut, but didn't mind paying if it goes to a good cause.

"I have grown accustomed to it." April Dawson, senior in horticulture, said. "And it's not too bad if it is going to be used for good things - then I don't really mind too much.

social-service matters." Jacqueline Spears, director of women's studies, shares the same perspective as McCulloh.

"Women have different concerns," Spears said. "Each commissioner, although I know they will listen carefully and consider each issue individually, still will turn to personal experience to evaluate the issue. Women simply have different ideas than men."

Spears said the perspective is narrowed if the group of commissioners is all the same

"It doesn't matter if it is all male or all female," she said. "Without different backgrounds, there will not be any conflicting ideas. I believe that commission should at some level reflect the diversity of the community.

Bruce Snead, who will be sworn in tonight as mayor, said he doesn't want * to prejudge decisions the commission will make based on gender. "I do think it is important to be diverse," he said, "but it is difficult to determine how a commission will react - all male or all female." In the early 1980s, Manhattan's head of county commission, mayor, school board president and chamber of commerce president were all female, McCulloh said.

"We have gone from having lots of women in Manhattan's government to having very few," she said. "I believe it is because voters are leaning toward a more conservative trend, and women tend to be more progressive."

TURNING THE TIDES

Baseball team looks to combine winning streaks as season closes

J.D. Loudabarger reaches for an A&M base runner during K-State's game Sunday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

Kansas State Collegian

One word best describes the K-State baseball season so far - streaky.

Thirty-seven games into the 2001 campaign, three losing streaks of four or more games and three winning stretches of three or more make up a large chunk of the Cats' 15-21 mark to this point.

Luckily for K-State, though, the tides have begun to turn again, resulting in a happier mood around Frank Myers Field as K-State continues down the home stretch with a 3 p.m. first pitch against Bethany College at Frank Myers Field on Wednesday afternoon.

"We're playing pretty well right now." head coach Mike Clark said after K-State took two of three games against Oklahoma last weekend.

"We played three ballgames against Oklahoma State, two against Maryland and three against Oklahoma, and we've gone pitch-for-pitch with them. And except for a call against Oklahoma State, we won two out of three there, two out of three here, and we swept Maryland, so we're playing pretty good ball against some pretty good teams."

Pitching, especially on the part of Clark's starting rotation, was one of the main elements of K-State's success in that stretch. But as good as the Cats' staff was against the Sooners, K-State also has seen its share of trouble on the mound this season.

K-State managed to keep the Sooners to just 11 runs in three games, but struggled from the mound earlier in the year, giving up at least eight runs in each of five straight lesses to Baylor, Oral Roberts and Oklahoma State before finding the rhythm again against the Cowboys in a 13-8 win April Wednesday's midweek matchup against the Swedes will give two Wildcats, senior J.D. Loudabarger and sophomore Pat Maloney, a chance to extend their team-high hitting streaks to 10 games after starring offensively for the Cats against Oklahoma.

"If you play well, then you keep the streak going. We're playing good ball right now. We need to keep playing good ball, no matter who we're playing, whether it's the best team in the nation or the worst team in the nation."

Loudabarger has exploded for K-State since recovering from flu symptoms that forced him out of action for the Maryland series. Against Oklahoma, the senior came through with four hits in eleven at-bats to push his average to .296 on the year.

"The whole team is just being more patient at the plate and getting better pitches, and that shows," he said. "If you look at the games we won (against Oklahoma), we were nations and we were hitting the balls that were in the zone." Not to be outdone, Maloney provided even more punch in Clark's lineup by going 4-for-10 with four RBI and a big three-run homerun in game one of Sunday's doubleheader against the Sooners. The rightfielder said afterward that the Cats still need more offense to finish the season right.

"I think we aren't even to our peak yet," he said. "We've got some guys hitting well, and some guys that aren't right now. Once everybody gets into a groove and we're all hitting the ball, we'll be tough to beat."

K-State's matchup against Bethany should feature some of the club's younger arms as Clark looks to rest his rotation for this weekend's series against UCLA. That means an opportunity for some of the club's younger players to shine.

"It's a great thing for our pitchers to come in and get some innings and throw some strikes," Maloney said. "It helps for our hitters, also. For some of our hitters that haven't been swinging too well, it's a big confidence builder to get some quality at-bats going into UCLA."

Runner posts best U.S. time in Boston Marathon in 8 years

The Associated Press

BOSTON - Progress is coming in small steps for American marathoners. Rod De Haven of Madison, Wis., finished sixth in two hours, 12 minutes, 41 seconds in Monday's 105th Boston Marathon, the best finish by an American since 1993.

Still, De Haven was almost three minutes behind winner Lee Bongju of South Korea, who broke a 10year hold by Kenyans on the men's race in 2:09.43.

The top American women's finisher Monday was Jill Gaitenby of Providence, R.L., who finished 14th in 2:36.45.

No Americans have won here since 1983, when Greg Meyer won the men's race and Joan Benoit won the women's.

Mark Plaatjes finished sixth in 1993, the last time an American man was in the top 10. Kim Jones finished ninth in 1997, the latest of her six top-10 finishes.

"As far as the brotherhood of the Americans," De Haven said, "the pace - we were all able to stay up there, it probably helped each of our confidence levels as the race drew on.

Josh Cox of El Cajon, Calif., led briefly during the first half of his first Boston Marathon, but fell back from the pack around the halfway point and finished 14th.

"It was a good experience," Cox said. "But I'm not here to lead the marathon through 12, 13 miles. I'm here to place well at the end."

Mark Coogan of Attleboro, Mass., who finished 19th overall and third among the American men, said it's a question of numbers - since nobody can predict who will have a strong race, the country that fields the most elite runners has the best shot.

(about the 22-mile mark), my legs were all dead, and everything was really hurring me, and I couldn't really do much. Coogan said American runners. who won seven of nine Boston

Marathons between 1975 and 1983, will return to the winner's stand. "I don't think the Koreans and Kenyans are better runners," he said. "I think the Americans work just as hard - we just haven't been as lucky of late."

Flight of players from Arizona indicitive of problem with NCAA

Talk about a mass exodus. Arizona's men's basketball team is losing players quicker than the Royals are losing road games.

Five starters, three cheerleaders. an assistant coach, the mascot, two hot dog vendors and the guy who says,

CHRIS McLEMORE "Let's get ready to rumble" before each home game all have declared themselves eligible for the NBA draft in the past few weeks. That's right. All five of Arizona's championship-game starters are entering the NBA.

Senior Loren Woods was lost to graduation, but four other players are leaving for professional development, and Arizona is hurting.

The Wildcats aren't alone. Across the country, college athletes are threatening to enter the proranks before they exhaust their four-year college invitation.

And you know what? I wish they would leave. I wish they would pack up and saddle NCAA basketball with six freshmen, two guys on injured reserve, Dick Vitale and Joe Leonard's brother.

I don't care if everyone in the Big Ten declares themselves eligible for the draft. Heck, the entire Notre Dame football team can head for the NBA. It wouldn't bother me.

Maybe that's what the NCAA needs

Maybe it will take the simultaneous exit of everyone associated with college basketball to put a scare into the bigwigs who run college sports.

College basketball has problems, and the NCAA seems Arizona's coach, Lute Olsen.

cannot recruit players to fill the blank spaces on his roster because of a new NCAA rule. The 5/8 rule limits teams to recruiting five scholarship players per year and no more than eight scholarship players in a two-year period. A team can have 13 players on scholarship. Because Arizona used its scholarships on players who have left for the NBA, they cannot try to recruit scholarship players until next year. The team will have to rely on its remaining underclassmen to step up, and they might have to convince some players to walk on. Arizona appealed, and its appeal was denied. Arizona isn't the only team suffering from the new rule. The 5/8 rule is a real thorn in Bobby Knight's side. If the 5/8 rule was a person, Knight would have punched it, choked it and verbally abused it by now.

Knight's problems developed when one Texas Tech player skipped town just moments after Knight donned a new shade of red, and three were given an assisted exit by Knight himself.

The NCAA says the rule was created to promote better recruiting decisions, reduce transfer rates and increase consistency in Division I basketball. But the rule leaves coaches at the mercy of the players. If a player leaves early, it damages the teammates he leaves behind. If a player acts inappropriately, the coach has to think twice before

I hate to side with Knight, but the guy's got a point. He dismissed several players who weren't up to snuff, and now he can't replace them. Texas Tech will only have nine or 10 scholarship players on its roster next year.

Amid all of the problems, the NCAA acts as if it doesn't encourage athletes to leave.

College athletes are about as cash-poor as the guy on Holiday Inn commercials

NCAA president Cedric Dempsey, pulls in $700,000 every 12 months, and the NCAA itself, a non-profit organization, just inked a $6 billion TV contract.

Despite all that cash, college basketball players get no stipend from the NCAA and little compensation overall. Athletes recently were given approval to have a job while in school, but income is capped at $2,000 per year. Players have their name splashed on NCAA souvenirs and jerseys, but they see nothing in return.

College basketball players are going to continue to leave as long as the incentives are so large. The lack of a stipend makes them want to leave, and the 5/8 rule punishes the wrong people.

Let me be the first to encourage athletes to leave college early. Keep abandoning the NCAA until it wakes up. I'm so adamant that I've made myself eligible for the NBA

See if that doesn't light a spark for collegiate reform.

LOCAL TALENT

WHO: The Special Guests

The Special Guests is a fourpiece rock band with no set lists,

The band is composed of guitarist Robbie Haas, bassist Chris Cossette, percussionist Brandon Noone and drummer

The Special Guests will appear live on the air at 4:20 p.m. on Friday on KSDB-FM 91.9 and will perform at 5:30 that evening at Safari Jack's with Flybox. White said he hopes people appreciate the long jams of the band over the radio.

The four began jamming together about two years ago before starting to perform last September. The energy put into the jams by the band gives it a strong feel, White said White, who began drumming at the age of eight, said he enjoys getting the audience to react to the music, and hopefully the audience will be impressed with the long, dynamic jams. "I like it when people appreciate good music," he said. "The ones that pay attention and then give constructive criticism."

Rock 'n' roll rebels

Orange catches Manhattan's eye with spontaneous concert

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

Rebellion and rock 'n' roll have always gone hand in hand, and at 11:30 p.m. April 7, Orange thrust itself into the spotlight with disregard for permits, venue or law.

Within minutes, the band set up, plugged in and began a set that would draw about 200 onlookers and run half an hour in front of Varney's Book Store. Ignoring any legal violations, the band wanted to entertain people and gain some recognition, Andrew Lonard, vocalist for Orange, said.

"We wanted to bring rock 'n' roll back to Manhattan," he said. "And we thought we'd do it with something real rock 'n' roll - like play in the street and get into trouble." Fortunately, for the band, no ticket was written and the only consequences were that the show was shut down. When spectators began to block the roads it became a safety issue, and if the band had gotten a permit to begin with, the show would have continued, said Officer Kevin Walter of the Riley County Police Department.

With the momentum of the event behind them, Orange is still trying to build a following in Manhattan. Phil Green, lead guitarist, said it has been difficult so far because of a lack of venues.

"There's not many venues to play," Green, senior in political science, said. "We've had problems playing around here because either people don't have an ear for rock or else they have their heads up their asses."

The band feels closely tied to rock 'n' roll, and Green said that's because so many groups right now tend to stray from rock with various types of fusion or other branches of the genre, but Orange wants to keep a straight rock sound.

"Orange is a kick-ass rock band, not a band that says, 'Oh we're a funk, hip-hop, kind of jazz rope-adope fusion whatever." he said. "We don't want to try being part of that - we are a rock 'n' roll band." Orange's propensity for over-confidence is inherent in the band, and Shawn Harding, bassist, said that even though the band seems cocky, once people start talking to them, they usually get along. Harding, junior in landscape architecture, said he thinks more bands should exude confidence when it comes to their music.

"All these bands out there aren't confident enough in what they're doing," he said. "We think it should be a big competition to see who the best band is. It shouldn't always be about being nice guys - there should be rivalries."

If it seems like the four are over-confident when they're together, that is because they know what they have, which is a strong ability to write rock songs, Green said. It doesn't matter if that over-confidence makes them unpopular among other bands, Green

"If you look at the great bands, at some point a lot of them were hated because they came out and said what they actually thought - that they were the best band around," he said.

The closeness of the band members may contribute to the confidence, and Dustin Keith, drummer, said the band members are all good friends. Keith said the history of the band began when he went to high school with Lonard and they began a band. Unfortunately, the band broke up when the bass player committed suicide, which discouraged the two for the rest of high school, Keith said.

Keith met up with Green and Harding in the Kappa Sigma fraternity, and they began to jam together. Lonard said he got a call from Keith about the guys he was jamming with, so Lonard showed up to practice with them to see how it felt.

"The first time we got together we wrote Ground Zero' in, like, five minutes. It was crazy, and I knew this was gonna work out," he said.

Since then, the four have grown close not only as fellow musicians, but as friends, and that makes a difference in the music, Keith said.

"The four of us just mixed well right away and we became friends," he said. "Even when we don't have our instruments, if we're together, we're practicing because of the chemistry between us."

Even if Orange isn't getting many local gigs, the future still looks promising for the band with a date set to record an E.P. produced by the band Deep Blue Something, and tour dates being set in England. Lonard said the band made friends with a Kansas City area band called the Feds, who became friends with Deep Blue Something after moving to Dallas.

KAREN MIKOLS/Collegian

"The Feds gave Deep Blue Something our demo tape, and I guess they liked it," he said. "It's not like Deep Blue Something is a huge name, but they do have some clout. The main thing we'll get out of this is we'll finally be able to get our music heard by someone in the business.

Green said he has family in England, so he visits there every so often. He and some musicians he met from Manchester have started to book gigs, starting with an Aug. 3 date to play the popular Cavern Club in

To help with the difficulties of gear transportation,

Green said the band will be sponsored by Orange Amps whenever they play a show in Great Britain. Getting the sponsorship was a stroke of luck, Green said, because he just called them since they had the same name as the band and half-expected to get turned down.

The summer will be an exciting time for the band. but for now, they are still concentrating on being the best they can, Lonard said. Orange will keep playing the rock 'n' roll the band members love and preparing for whatever might come in the future.

"We've set high goals for ourselves, and we're striving to get better," Lonard said.

Bush administration calls for end of violence erupting in Mideast

By BARRY SCHWEID The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration accused Hezbollah guerrillas Monday of igniting a new cycle of violence in the Middle East and urged restraint on all sides.

But despite the intervention of Secretary of State Colin Powell. who spoke by telephone to leaders in Lebanon, Israel and Syria, the fighting persisted.

Palestinians aimed mortar shells at an Israeli town, which they had not done during a sevenmonth conflict, and Israel retaliated by shelling and rocketing Palestinian positions in Gaza.

"We are very concerned at this stage about the dangerous escalation of violence," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said after Israel struck at a Syrian radar station deep in Lebanon to retaliate for the killing of an Israeli tank crewman Saturday by Hezbollah.

The exchange between the Palestinians and Israel then ensued, further heightening tensions in the region.

Hezbollah, an armed Islamic force, had engaged regularly in cross-border attacks on Israel before former Prime Minister Ehud Barak gave up a security zone last year that Israel had maintained with friendly Lebanese militia in southern Lebanon.

Hezbollah attacks also were taking a steady toll in Israeli soldiers' lives. The Clinton administration praised Barak's government for the withdrawal.

Then, as now, Israel holds Syria responsible for Hezbollah attacks. The Bush administration also apparently considers Syria in control of the guerrillas.

Spokesman Boucher said, "We are encouraging everybody in the region to exercise influence and look to the Syrians to exercise influence over Hezbollah."

The administration did not condemn Israel's retaliation,

Shopping on the Westside

"We sell memories

making it clear it considers Hezbollah at fault for the outbreak.

"What we saw was an unprovoked attack, a clear provocation that was designed to set off a cycle of violence, and we think that's where the primary burden rests," Boucher said.

But a senior U.S. official stressed the United States had made known to Israel it was seriously concerned with its use of force and advised Israel against solving its problems that way.

Three Syrian soldiers were lilled in what was the first Israeli airstrike against Syrian targets since 1996. Syrian troops are in effective control of Lebanon.

In Moscow, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa warned that Israel will pay a heavy price for that at the convenient and appropriate time.

Israel, he said, was killing the peace process and expanding the tension and instability in the whole-Middle East.

KSU readies for start of qualified admissions

Kansas State Collegian

The fall freshman class will be different than any other freshman class and shrouded in a bit of mystery.

Those freshmen will be the first students admitted to Kansas universities under qualified admissions. The mystery lies in who these students will be and if they will change the face of the university.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life and associate vice president of institutional advancement, said he does not want to reveal any projections about the demographics of incoming students.

"It would be a self-fulfilling prophecy," he Larry Moeder, director of admissions, said he doesn't think qualified admissions would change the student makeup of campus, but he said those students will be coming to K-State more prepared.

Kansas is the last state to have open admissions. Before the standards were introduced, any Kansas high school graduate who applied had to be admitted to a four-year university.

The new standards require students to earn a 21 through the American College Testing Program, graduate in the top third of their classes or earn 2.0 grade point averages in college preparatory curricula.

Moeder said he thinks a larger number of students have solid course preparation and GPAs than strong ACT scores.

The course work is more important than the ACT score in predicting success, he said. "A test score is a snap shot of one day," he sald.

Thirty-seven percent of K-State's applicants in fall 1999 scored a 21 or lower on their ACT, according to the 2000-2001 Fact Book. Bosco said he expects the standards will take a few years to sink in. High school principals and counselors, grandparents and parents were admitted under open admissions, he said.

"These first couple of years, we don't want any kids to get lost in the shuffle," Bosco said. The students at Manhattan High School have been fully informed about qualified admissions since they were in the eighth grade, said Nancy Wilson, director of health and human services at Manhattan High. "I think knowing teen-agers, they will think, 'They will let me in anyway,'" she said. More students are taking college preparatory work, and the standards only will hurt those who have not worked to their ability, she said. Bosco said he thinks students might be self-selecting themselves out of the pool of applicants because they think they will not meet the requirements.

"We're not ready to give up on anybody."

All Kansas Board of Regents' universities can admit up to 10 percent of their students under exceptions.

Regents meet to scrutinize 2003 budget

By NICK BRATKOVIC Kansas State Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents will be on campus today and Thursday for its monthly meetings to continue discussions on the budget for the fiscal year 2003.

This tops the list of the board's priorities and is slated for early morning discussion. Clay Blair, Board of Regents chairman, said the meetings will help K-State determine its budget strategies for next year.

Blair said it is important to establish a strategy for the budget due to the economic problems Kansas is experiencing.

He said it forces the regents to examine what they are trying to do. "There doesn't seem to be any relief in sight,"

In addition to determining budget strategies for 2003, Blair said the regents also are monitoring

Blair said a priority of the board is to get some of the proposed cuts restored - priorities that Blair said include restoring the technology fund and utility funds.

the happenings in the state Legislature.

"We are guardedly optimistic that the funds will be restored," he said.

Blair said he believes the leadership in the state house will help their efforts.

Pat Hall is a woman of a 1,000 smiles. Thirty-eight hours a week she dons a blue vest and a cheerful disposition for her job as a people greeter at Wal-Mart.

Hall, 52, has worked for a year as a greeter. She first worked at the store when she was a college student during the 1970s.

"I enjoy meeting people," she said. "It's a fun job."

Hall's job is to offer customers shopping carts, put pink stickers on their return merchandise and generally welcome customers to the store.

Hall seems to balance the inundation of shoppers with ease. She was offering shopping carts to incoming customers with one hand, while a child was lishing through a blue shopping basket for some Easter candy.

Some of the children proudly stuck out their chests for yellow smiley-face stickers. One might be surprised who else likes those little stickers.

"I have college students who can't go home until they have a smiley-face sticker," she said, "and I have some senior citizens who need their smileyface stickers.

The greeter job is Hall's second job. She works full-time as an education assistant at Mercy Health Center.

Mississippi decides to keep Confederate emblem

JACKSON, Miss. - Mississippi voted overwhelmingly to keep the Confederate emblem on its flag Tuesday, rejecting suggestions from the governor and business leaders that a new flag would help the state escape its segregationist past.

With 78 percent of the precincts reporting, 372,810 voters, or 66 percent, favored keeping the old flag, and 189,592 voters, or 34 percent, wanted

Mississippi is the last state to prominently display the emblem on its flag.

Former Gov. William Winter, who led a commission last year that recommended a new banner, said he is disap-to work for a Mississippi that has its face turned to the future and not the past. The vote was largely split along racial lines. In DeSoto County, a predominantly white county in the Memphis suburbs, the old flag led by a six-to-one margin. In Hinds County, the majority-black county that includes Jackson, the new flag led two-to-one.

Voters had two choices: keep the current 1894 flag with the Confederate emblem of 13 white stars on a blue X. or adopt a new flag with 20 white stars on a blue square, denoting Mississippi's role as the 20th state.

Farmer Terry Galey voted to keep the old banner.

Bush administration to uphold lead regulations

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration said Tuesday it will uphold regulations issued in the last weeks of Bill Clinton's presidency requiring thousands more businesses to report their releases of toxic lead into the environment.

Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Christie Todd Whitman announced the action shortly after meeting with President Bush at the White House

She said the new regulations, bitterly opposed by industry groups, will require any manufacturing or processing facility that emits at least 100 pounds of lead or lead compounds a year to report the releases to the government.

Current regulations require a facility to report any lead or lead compound emissions if the facility processes more than 25,000 pounds of them annually or uses 10,000 pounds a year.

"This action reflects the president's strong commitment to protecting America's children from the damaging effects of lead poisoning," Whitman said. "President Bush and this administration will continue to do everything that we can to continue to protect the health and well-being of American people through appropriate environmental measures."

Whitman said she anticipated opponents would go to court to try to block the regulation. "We get sued in EPA for anything I do in any day of the week," she said.

EPA officials estimated the regulations would require at least 9,800 more industrial facilities to be included in the government's annual Toxics Release Inventory. The collection of data on toxic releases and their origins is made available to the public through several sources, including EPA's Internet site.

State Legislature could cut budget by millions

TOPEKA - The Senate Ways and Means chairman outlined a proposal for resolving the state's budget problems by cutting $42.8 million in planned spending less than what House leaders want.

The proposal Tuesday from Chairman Steve Morris would cut general government programs $20 million. It also would slice $4.4 million to cities and counties and suspend $18.4 million in payments to a death and disability fund.

Morris also proposed tapping $86.5 million in highway, nursing home payment and tobacco litigation settlement funds and using them to pay for general government programs. His plan would step up the collection of delinquent taxes to raise another $48

In addition, he proposes to rewrite insurance premium tax laws to raise another $10 million. The tax is paid by insurance companies on the value of policies they write, and the burden under Morris' plan would fall on out-ofstate companies.

Studies show moderate drinking may aid health

CHICAGO - People who have a drink or so daily are more likely than teetotalers to survive a heart attack and less likely to develop heart failure, two studies suggest.

The findings add to the suspected benefits of moderate alcohol consumption.

Extensive research has shown that moderate drinkers are less likely to have heart attacks than abstainers, and heavy drinking has been linked to heart failure. But there is little research on the effects of moderate drinking on heart attack survival and heart failure.

The new research appears in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

Still, doctors are not prepared to routinely prescribe booze, because of the possible effects on such things as breast cancer, fetal defects and colon cancer, Dr. Arthur L. Klatsky said in an accompanying editorial. Also, moderate drinking can lead to problem drinking, he said.

Compared with abstainers, light drinkers (under seven drinks a week) were about 20 percent less likely to die, and moderate drinkers (seven or more drinks a week) were about 30 percent less

It made little difference whether the patients drank mostly wine, beer or liquor.

The researchers said the numbers were too small to evaluate the effects of heavy drinking.

The studies did not look at exactly why moderate drinking appeared to have a protective effect.

But alcohol has been shown to increase levels of so-called good cholesterol and can make blood less likely to clot. Also, while heavy drinking can raise blood pressure, moderate drinking can lower it.

Deb Patterson, women's head basketball coach, was the recipient of the 2001 Outstanding Leadership Award. Patterson was chosen to receive the award because of her leadership and service to K-State and the Manhattan community.

Coach receives recognition

By CAMILLE BOISSEAU

Kansas State Collegian

Every great leader has exceptional followers, and followers empower leaders, Deb Patterson

Patterson, K-State women's head basketball coach, spoke Tuesday evening in the Union Bluemont Room at the Leadership Studies and Programs recognition celebration. She received the Outstanding Leadership Award, sponsored by the K-State Leadership Studies program.

The award was established in 1999 to honor those who follow the program's mission to develop knowledgeable, ethical, caring leaders for a diverse world. Bob Shoop, co-founder of the program, presented the award to Patterson.

"We hope by giving this award, we identify values we think are important for a leader to have," Shoop said. "A good leader has a vision. A vision is formed by finding a common understanding with the organization about where you are going."

Patterson said she was extremely humbled to represent the award.

"I believe in the purpose of the leadership mission," Patterson said. "I have the desire in my heart as a leader to empower young people."

Patterson said her vision for the program was to create experiences for the team where individuals could feel empowered.

"You need to have passion to tap into your strengths," she said. "I hope that when young people put on a KSU jersey that they really are challenged on who they can be and can affect the world.

"I want to give and touch others. I want to give sunshine and spark to others."

Patterson said she was empowered by being surrounded by awesome people.

"Let your emotion and passion show, and you will be better by the people around you," Patterson said.

She spent her day attending a leadership class, participating in group activities and meeting with the leadership ambassadors. She learned what students are doing and how they are giving, she said.

Kris Meiergerd, senior in animal science and industry, said the outstanding leadership award is a chance to recognize people.

"She is more then a coach. She is focused on bettering students to become successful people in life," Meiergerd said. "I feel that a leader is willing to put others before themselves and bring gifts out of others."

Patterson said her role as a leader is dynamic.

"Being a leader is my greatest passion," she said. "To affect lives of players and students — this is my main opportunity to make a difference in their lives."

Commission discusses super duplexes issue

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

A re-outfitted Manhattan City Commission already has burned the midnight oil at its first meeting Tuesday night, courtesy of the "super duplex" issue.

Ironic, considering outgoing Mayor Karen McCulloh's goodbye to new commissioners Brad Everett and Mark Taussig.

"Even when the meetings run late, I know you will find this experience rewarding," she said.

The meeting did run late for Everett, Taussig, incumbents Roger Reitz and Ed Klimek as well as newly appointed Mayor Bruce Snead — close to 12:15 a.m.

Following the instatement of Everett and Taussig, reinstatement of Reitz and comments from McCulloh and outgoing Commissioner Carol Peak, the majority of the five-plus hour meeting was devoted to crafting "red flags" to review the construction of the controversial super duplexes.

The proposed ordinance suggested that certain duplexes or related structures be considered as conditional use. That means they would be subject to special review by the Manhattan Urban Planning Board to be certain they are compatible with the existing neighborhood.

The structures, generally large, two-story duplexes that dominate lots, have caused concern primarily in older Manhattan areas. The duplexes have been blamed by some for blighting neighborhoods in the name of cheap high-density student housing, a view echoed by many speakers before the commission.

Bill Schenck-Hamlin, Manhattan resident, compared the duplexes to bed-and-breakfast businesses, which already are designated as conditional use.

"Both are businesses that serve a transient community," he said. "One is regulated for family use, and the other is given carte blanche."

Both he and Phil Anderson, a local landlord, said the ordinance would not prevent building of such structures but merely assure they would fit. "The crucial thing is that the neighborhoods have the opportunity to see what is happening and comment on it," Anderson said.

Mike Cardella, Manhattan resident, said he understands students need housing, but these duplexes cause power outages and old sewers to back up, killing the livelihood of the neighborhoods.

"Somebody needs to build something nice for them, but in the middle of the block?" he said. "Barnlike super duplexes do not belong in our neighborhood. Just drive down the street, and you can tell."

There seemed to be little debate about the need for the ordinance among the commission, but details about which structures would be designated as conditional use proved much more difficult.

The ordinance eventually passed at about 11:25 p.m., saying single-family attached dwellings and two-family dwellings located in areas zoned R-2 or R-M would be considered conditional if they passed three criterion. First, one must cover 30 percent or more of the lot, plus be made up of two or more habitable stories — partially or totally above ground.

In addition, the building in question must satisfy two of the following three conditions: one or both units in the structure have no attached garage, off-street parking is proposed in front of and behind the structure, and the entire structure is contained on one lot. These criterion passed on a 4-1 vote, with Snead opposing.

Unresolved was whether the ordinance should automatically expire after a given period of time. Taussig said he supported such a "sunset date."

"I look at this as a temporary solution, and I don't think it's a good one," he said.

In the end, the sunset issue was left for a later time, while city staff was directed to look at more permanent solutions, such as down-zoning or changing the zoning regulations themselves as far as parking.

"I think it would be best to chew on this and think about it at a later time," Snead said.

Nuclear weapons not best way to spend U.S. resources

I heard something disturbing on the radio last Sunday. Apparently, the United States is trying to develop a smaller nuclear bomb.

The reason why the current weapons of mass destruction no longer are in vogue is because they are too large to hit their desired target. The Department of Defense wants to build a smaller nuclear bomb so we can destroy Saddam Hussein's underground shelters.

smaller

nuclear bomb really necessary? I understand we need to protect ourselves and ensure our nation's security, but I don't think this is a defense tactic. It's more like a fancy show of power. The whole reason for wanting to develop this bomb is so we can go over to the Middle East, seek out Saddam and bomb him to bits. He's not coming after us - we're going after him.

Now, granted, I'm not a nuclear physicist by any means, but is size really that big of an issue as far as a nuclear weapon is concerned? When you drop a nuclear bomb on something, you're going to create a lot of damage, regardless of the size of the actual bomb.

But that's not the part that really troubles me. Our government probably is plates every night. To me, it seems like those in charge in the military want the United States to have the most technologically advanced weapons so we'll look like the tough guys. The Department of Defense is acting like a kid at show and tell who wants to show off a new toy. While exorbitant amounts of money are being spent to make our military look high-tech and sophisticated. there are many domestic problems that are falling by

> Imagine that. An entire nation of well-educated citizens who can sit down with diplomats from other countries and work through the problems. Sounds like a good idea to me.

Or maybe we could use some of the money to feed the hungry and provide shelter for the homeless. If we want our nation to look strong and powerful. maybe we should fix the domestic problems first. Getting the homeless off the streets and making sure our citizens are cared for is a better sign of a strong, thriving country than a fancy military force.

Perhaps we could use some of that money to help fight prejudice in the United States. We could try to teach people tolerance and acceptance of people of different races, creeds and nationalities. If we tried a national campaign of cultural sensitivity and awareness, we might not have situations to worry about like the one we're facing in Cincinnati. We have a war going on within our own borders. The last thing we need to do right now is go start a squabble with another country.

Maybe these problems are too much for our current leaders to take on. It's much easier to sweep the nasty little problems that nip at our nation's conscience under the rug than it is to address them.

It would probably be less confusing, less heart-wrenching and a heck of a lot easier to create a sophisticated nuclear weapon the size of a lima bean than it would be to heal that from which our country is ailing.

Respect, education needed for foreign relations

LJUBLJANA, Slovenia -Carmen Sandiego and her henchmen need to look no further for a hiding spot from the common gumshoe. Tucked away in a region most Americans know so little about, there is little doubt they will be discovered anytime soon.

The most successful Yugoslav breakaway republic, Slovenia. has entered the 21st century quietly. It bridges its poorer southern and eastern neighbors with the higher income per capita of Italy and Austria.

The Republic of Slovenia. covering only 20,256 square kilometers, has modernized rapidly and attained a high GDP. The war with Serbia lasted only 10 days here in the early 1990s, and the country now is a qualified candidate for both the European Union and NATO membership. Thousands flocked the streets of Ljubljana when President Clinton visited here a few years ago. In the pouring rain, their joy at being host to the president of the United States would not be dampened. The people I met loved Americans and were eager to discuss domestic issues of the United States.

Editor's note: "Around the World" is a seven-part series examining European countries and capitals.

Part 5: LJUBLIANA, Slovenia Part 6: Budapest, Hungary Part 7: Warsaw, Poland

Yet, most Americans never have heard of Slovenia. Asked to state what they know of Slovenia, most citizens would stand with mouths half open and say, "Uhhhh ... Slovenia. Didn't we bomb them or something?" Asking for the pronunciation of the capital, Ljubljana (LEW-B-YAWN-UH), might cause an instant attack of mass confusion.

Therefore, the common people have chosen to stick their heads in the sands of our gritty culture. Our society will continue to pay no attention to the rest of the world until our three-letter agencies of intelligence tell us it is time to drop a few bombs and make a few threats. Military personnel shouldn't be the only ones knowledgeable of where our targets were located and why we would want to eliminate them.

Ask yourself this question. "Were we fighting Serbs, Croats, Bosnians, Muslims or Christians? Whom were we protecting?" Now ask yourself, "Did we win?" Of course, we always do.

That's the thing that sickens me today. Being in Slovenia, the lovely country on the "sunny side of the Alps," and having to break the news. K-State should re-examine plus/minus grading system

Editor,

I'd like to explain to you why K-State should switch its grading system to a plus/minus grading system.

There are four Big 12 schools that are using this type of grading system. They are Iowa State, Colorado, Missouri and Texas-Tech. K-State should be a part of the list, which they are not.

The grading that K-State has, does not represent student academic progress accurately. The systems main flaw is that the final exams are meaningless unless you are on the borderline between two grades and, even then, it is hard to get the higher grade. This discourages students to study for the final tests, knowing their grades already are determined. Why even have the final test then? They do nothing to Hopefully, I'm not the only one who has figured this out. The faculty members whom I have talked to also would like to see this change in the system. I think it would benefit everyone on this campus. The grading system is too dependable for students. There is a need for this change in order to accurately record a student's academic performance.

A change in the system to a plus/minus system will allow students to be eligible for more scholarships that they might not have been eligible for before. They also might get into their degree tracks earlier with a more accurate grading system.

This would reduce the pressure on students to try to reach the specified grade point average they need for the major they choose.

I understand there are some costs in implementing this system, but the school also is spending money on a brick wall in front of the greenhouse and conserva-

Do we really need that?

That money could be going toward something important - that is, the students at K-State. We, as the students at K-State, should have the option of how we are to be evaluated.

Mock honor-code hearing tests university cheating policy

By THERESA BECKER

-Kansas State Collegian

In 1994, K-State was shocked by a cheating scandal. The result of that scandal, and the national news coverage it received, led to the formation of the Undergraduate Honors System. director Phil Anderson, said.

On Tuesday, the Honors Council had a mock hearing in the Union Courtyard as part of Integrity Week to explain the system and demonstrate how it works.

When a student is in violation of the honors code, a panel of undergraduate students and faculty members conduct an investigation and hearing to determine whether the student is guilty of cheating.

Anderson said the council is made up of 34 students and faculty who represent each of the eight colleges. The council is selected by deans and the student body presi-

The Honors Council works with the Honor and Integrity Peer Educators, a student group. HIPE advises students who have been accused of violating the honors code, along with educating students about the honors policy.

The panel for the mock hearing consisted of two faculty members and three student members.

Paul Seger, Honors Council and panel student member and junior in agronomy, said he thinks having an equal number of students and faculty is important.

"We like to give equal representation to students. That's why there are a majority on the panel that are students," Seger said.

But that doesn't mean the alleged violator will be given easy treatment by his or her peers,

"We have discovered over time that the students tend to be more tough than the faculty," Anderson said.

When a student is reported to the council of an alleged cheating violation, it first goes to case investigators, one student and one faculty member. The student, along with a HIPE member, then meets with the case investigators to determine whether or not they will go before the panel.

The panel will hear from the case investigators, the reporter of the alleged cheating violation and then the student.

After all parties have been given an opportunity to tell their sides and the panel has asked questions of each group, they adjourn to discuss the outcome.

Ion Kurche, chairman of the Honors Council and senior in physics, said deliberation can last anywhere from 10 minutes to hours.

"There are two considerations we have to make. First, did the alleged actually violate a part of the honor system and sanctioning?"

Sanctioning can be anything from a failing grade on an assignment or test to expulsion from K-State.

Kurche said punishment generally falls somewhere in the middle.

Anderson said there has been a case where a student was expelled.

"We have had one incident where a student got two XFs in one semester. That student was expelled upon recommendation of the provost," Anderson said.

An XF is an F in the course that cannot be removed from the student's transcript. The class can be taken over, but the XF cannot be Jon Kurche, Honor Council chairman and senior in physics, listens to Ben Sharp, alleged violator and sophomore in secondary education, plead his case in a mock honor code hearing Wednesday in the Union Courtyard.

Anderson said the panel's decision cannot be overturned by anyone except the panel, and appeals are hard to get.

"There has to be substantial new evidence or a procedural irregularity," Anderson said, "in order for there to be an appeal."

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI - Dozens of black teenagers, emboldened by last week's rioting, say established community leaders don't speak for them, and they're tired of being ignored.

"The older generation could have prevented this," said Derrick Blassingame, president of the newly formed Black Youth Coalition Against Civil Injustice. "Our black leaders are not leading us.

Blassingame helped organize a teen forum Monday, which allowed youths to air grievances following the death of Timothy Thomas, who was killed by a white police officer.

The teen-agers, speaking to about 300 people, blamed last week's racial tension on police, the media and the black men considered their spokesmen.

"Some of our black leaders just want their faces on TV. They are in this for four things only: reputation, power, politics and money," Blassingame said.

Three days of arson, looting and attacks on motorists followed the April 7 shooting death of Thomas, who was unarmed and running away from officers trying to arrest him on misdemeanor and traffic warrants.

Police arrested more than 800 people during demonstrations, and a citywide curlew -lifted Monday - was put in place for the first since the race riots of 1968.

"We fumbled the ball, and we need to listen to our young people," said the Rev. H.L. Harvey Jr., pastor at New Friendship Baptist Church where the forum took place.

Some youths urged boycotts of whiteowned businesses. Others demanded punishment for Officer Steve Roach, who shot Thomas. Angela Leisure, Thomas' mother, urged the forum to turn to peaceful protest.

"I don't want to see anybody else hurt." she said. "Let my son be the last one. Don't givethem any excuse to justify killing us or beating us down anymore.

Leisure warned there could be more violence if a grand jury does not indict Roach. "We are all sitting on a powder keg, waiting to see what the grand jury decides," she said. "Let's see if that officer is held accountable."

The FBI, police and the county prosecutor are investigating the shooting. Fifteen blacks have died in confrontations with police since 1995, four of them since November.

A Hamilton County grand jury soon should begin hearing evidence about the shooting, county Prosecutor Michael Allen said Tuesday.

"If there's an indictment, it will be because of the facts of the case, and not because of pressure from the community," Allen said. "We're going to present it straight up and let the members of the grand jury make the Cincinnati was sued last month by citizen groups who accused the police department of failing to end 30 years of police harassment of blacks. On Monday, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said it would join in the lawsuit.

Prior to the meeting, several Cincinnati companies pledged more support for job and loan programs in the city's black community.

"The events of the last week are a tragedy," said Jack Cassidy, president of Cincinnati Bell, who offered to turn a high school in one of the city's low-income neighborhoods into a technology center.

Track team seeks national exposure at Kansas Relays

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's track and field team will begin a four-day competition at the Kansas Relays in Lawrence today

While the meet isn't one of the most important in terms of preparing the team for the Big 12 and NCAA Championships it does provide local exposure for the athletes, head coach Call ,

"In the overall scheme of things, it's not one of the things that we focus on. But the fact that it's one of the few meets. that we compete in close enough to where family and friends can come watch, not just in-state kids, but also out of-state kids, their friends can see them compete," he said. "This is the closest opportunity since we don't have any home meets.

"It's something that they look forward to, but we're not going to do anything here that would not be in what was the best interest of individuals or the team collectively towards the conference and nationals."

Since the team doesn't prepare, especially for this meet. many of the athletes are in training stages that are not necessarily conducive to earning top distances and times. Nonetheless, many of the athletes could return home with

"The reality is in this particular meet with the caliber of athletes that are in this particular program," Rovelto said. "A lot of them have opportunities to place real high and even win.

The real goal, however, is improvement. "From my perspective, what's most important is the performance," Royelto said. "If that performance means they win, wonderful. If it means they're fourth or fifth in a real outstanding field, that's just as good. What we're looking for is just for people to perform at levels of expectations given where they are in their training right now."

Sophomore outfielder Pat Maloney was selected as the Phillips 66 Big 12 Baseball Player of the Week after his performance from the plate in helping K-State to a 4-1 record against Maryland and Oklahoma.

"This linuor comes as no surprise to me after the week Pat had last week," head coach Mike Clark said. "He is hitting the ball better than anyone right now. He really helped pace as offensively as well as in the field in the wins over Maryland and Oklahoma.

"He single-handedly helped us win the first game on Sunday (over Oklahoma), with a big triple to lead off the contest. then a three-run home run to give us the lead in the bottom of the seventh."

The Overland Park, Kan., native is in the midst of one of the best offensive streaks of his young collegiate career. riding a team-high nine-game hitting streak into today's game with Bethany. Last week, Maloney went 8-for-17 (.471) in five starts in right field with five runs scored, 11 RBI and two home runs. Against 2000 NCAA Regional participant Oklahoma, he recorded a 5-for-10 (.500) performance from the plate with four RBIs, three runs scored, two home runs and a triple.

In a sweep of ACC foe Maryland on April 9-10, he posted a 4-for-7 (.571) effort from the plate with seven RBI and two runs scored, highlighted by his 2-for-2 performance with four RBI in an 11-8 win in the series finale.

Maloney is K-State's second Big 12 Player of the Week this season and the first since senior designated hitter/catcher Josh Cavender earned the accolade during the second week of the season Feb. 12.

Teammates, family, friends remember Pirates slugger

PITTSBURGH - Amid laughter and funny stories, Willie Stargell was remembered Tuesday for being a trickster and comedian as much as a Hall of Fame slugger who hit 500-foot

Teammates, current Pirates, friends and relatives gathered at the memorial service for the man known as "Pops," who died last week at age 51 after a long battle with kidney

Former Pittsburgh Pirates manager Chuck Tanner regaled the audierice of 900 with tales about Stargell, who once had teammates put wet cabbage under their hats to stay cool for a summer game. Stargell drew stares when the leaves flew out as he slid into home. Tanner said, drawing laughs.

Tanner said Stargell also convinced teammates that cheap wine was $125-a-bottle champagne and duped Reds shortstop Dave Concepcion into believing he would be out if he touched a fielder while on the bases.

Stargell kept players loose, too, such as when the Baltimore Orioles loaded the bases and were trying to rally in the 1979 World Series with Eddie Murray at the plate.

"He calls a time out. I had no idea what he was up to. He went over to (reliever) Kent Tekulve and said, 'If you're afraid of him, I'll pitch to him and you play first," Tanner said. "And sure enough, Murray hit it to right field, and (Dave) Parker caught it, and the inning was over and we won." Teammates Al Oliver and Steve Blass; opponents Andre Dawson, Tony Perez and Frank Robinson; and current Pirates Jason Kendall and Brian Giles joined relatives for the Stargell was buried Saturday in Wilmington, N.C.

"I don't need notes to talk about Willie," said Oliver, a Baptist deacon in Portsmouth, Ohio. "For me, it's just so easy. Willie was a winner in every sense of the word."

Stargell hit 475 home runs for the Pirates from 1962-1982, including four upper-deck home runs at the recently demolished Three Rivers Stadium, a 535-foot home run at Olympic Stadium in Montreal and what was believed to be the first ball to leave Dodger Stadium. "I'm here for 'Pops," said Pirates fan Bill Prosser. "I caught one of his home runs in the cheap seats when I was a kid, and he signed it the next day, no problem. I don't think the players today are as good with the kids as he was."

Friends at St. Mary of Mercy Roman Catholic Church remembered Stargell's quick wit and practical jokes.

"He never forgot that we were playing a simple game," said Blass, a pitcher with the 1971 World Series champion Pirates and now a broadcaster with the team.

"He said, 'Listen to the ump. He says, Play ball, not Work ball!" Blass recalled.

Perez knew how to get to Stargell, though. Blass said the Reds' first baseman would aggravate painful coms on Stargell's feet by whacking them with his feet as he slid into first to avoid pickoffs.

But respect didn't come easily for Robertson. The Wichita native's road to Manhattan was a long one, complete with personal sacrifice and plenty of stops along the way.

The junior's first experience with baseball was perhaps the most important in his career, Robertson said. With two older brothers, he said competition was hearty in his household, and the drive to beat them in any and all things is what made him the player he is today.

"It's what my approach to whatever I do is," he said. "My older brothers and my dad have always been my driving force. Growing up, I always wanted to beat my brothers, but they were better than me. I had to do whatever it took to win, so that's where my competitive nature came

That commitment and dedication to the game lives on in Robertson's game today. Still bothered by bad outings, Robertson said even now, it's tough to lose.

"On game days when I lose, I don't even like to call home because I feel like my dad will be disappointed with me," he said. "It takes me a while to let it eat at me before I can finally talk to him about it. When it doesn't bother me anymore, that's when it's time to hang 'em up."

After three strong years at Maize (Kan.) High School, Robertson made the decision to walk on to the Wichita State baseball team - a risk, he said. that paid off even though it wasn't a storybook ending for the

"Out of high school, I knew that I'd be able to learn a lot about how to pitch," he said.

"Walking on there was probably one of the best things that could have happened in my career, but when I made the decision to leave there, it was probably the secondbest thing because I had taken a lot, and I grew as a pitcher and as a person.

After just one season with the Shockers, Robertson would take the lessons he learned to Butler County Community College, where he showed the makings of a quality starting pitcher by holding opposing batters to a .217 average in eight appearances and striking out 46 batters.

Finally, in 2000, Robertson would get his opportunity to play regularly as the No. 2 starter for K-State.

"It meant more to me to be part of a team by playing because I like to be the guy that's counted on to get a job done. Just sitting and watching bothered me, and that's why I wanted to come to K-State," he said.

Clark and company were happy he did. As a sophomore, Robertson was second only to Wells in innings pitched with 75.0 and struck out a team-high 73 batters.

'We've always had a lot of faith in Luke," Clark said, "He's grown up, learned from his mistakes, and he's a guy that wants the ball in big situations. And we want to give it to him.

"He's put himself in the position to be the ace of the staff, and for the most part, he's been solid on the mound since he's been

"Pervis is a long 6'9" player that plays taller than he is listed. He has great lift off the ground and runs the court extremely well. He also has the ability to block and alter shots.

"If his low post game continues to improve, he will be a force down on the block."

Hayes, a 6-foot-4-inch, 191pound guard from Oviedo High School (Fla.), averaged 18.1 points. 6.1 rebounds, 3.1 assists and 2.2 steals per game on a team that posted a 29-2 record.

He connected at 45.6 percent from behind the three-point arc as a senior and was selected to play in last month's Florida All-Star

"Marcus is a point guard that we are truly excited about." Wooldridge said. "He will not only provide a backup at the pointguard position next season but will be able to give us time at the offguard as well."

Both Canby and Hayes will have four years of eligibility remaining beginning next fall, and Pasco will have two.

Chiefs-Rams rivalry just starting

Boy, is it a great time to be a Chiefs fan.

Forget about the good ol' days of classic matchups against the Raiders. You'll probably have to tune in to ESPN Classic now to see those. This year's crop of Chiefs have other things on the brain.

But have no fear, tomahawk choppers. These days, there's a new team to hate in Kansas City, and it looks like this rivalry might get

After yanking former St. Louis Rams coach Dick Vermeil out of retirement in mid-January to spark the kindling for this fledgling fire. Chiefs president Carl Peterson boiled the blood of Rams fans even more by talking to St. Louis free agent quarterback Trent Green about coming to Kansas City less than a month after the Vermeil

The bell rang on round three of the Show-Me State square-off Monday night when Peterson announced that St. Louis wide receiver Tony Horne, one of the NFL's best kickoff returners, had signed a two-year contract offer with the Chiefs, forcing the Rams to match the offer or lose him

And that's not all. Since Kansas

City still is without a quarterback. and Green is still on the market, Peterson hasn't ruled out the possibility of fans seeing the Rams QB regularly in Arrowhead Stadium next season. For that to happen though, the Chiefs probably would have to give up a third and twelfth-> round pick in Saturday's draft, a price Peterson said is too high to pay.

Still, with the Governor's Cup up for grabs in Vermeil's return to St. Louis in the Chiefs' final preseason tuneup on Aug. 31, something tells me that players on both sidelines might be working for more than just playing time when they run out of the Trans World Dome tunnel.

Just in case you aren't already clearing your palm pilot, here are a couple of reasons to circle this one on your calender and come up with a lame excuse to get off work the next day to stay up late and catch the game.

- NFL preseason games usually aren't packed with emotion, but it might be your first chance to see Vermeil's first teary-eyed breakdown as the Chiefs' head man. It almost was a given after each Rams contest. Don't expect Vermeil's incessant sobbing to cease in Kansas City, but it's OK to hope that his magical tears can bring a Super Bowl title to town.

-The gloves could come off. Whereas the Raiders and Chiefs have had to find a reason to hate each other in recent years, this season's two matchups against the Rams already are stocked with storylines and motives for a fight. ESPN recently picked up the game, too, casting an even brighter spotlight on the night. Look for tempers to be hotter than a John Rocker appearance at Shea Stadium in the playoffs.

-Although draft day still is four days away, both teams will be looking for production out of their respective newcomers. The newlook Chiefs have nine picks in Saturday's draft, and if the 12th overall pick still is in Kansas City's hands on Saturda, look for a playmaker to make an immediate impact for Vermeil's team.

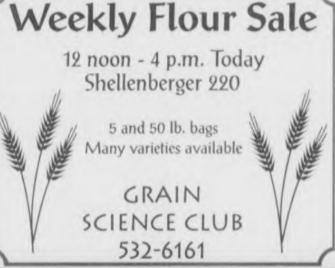

Regardless of how it all plays out, the fact remains that the Rams' organization and fans still are bitter about Vermeil's return to coaching in a city other than St. Louis. With so much on the line, it should be an exciting day for both teams and the dawn of a new football rivalry in Missouri.

tual play for the scientist, the philosopher, the mathematician, the gardener and even the sex addict in

"Arcadia,' is primarily a mystery and love story," Charlotte MacFarland, director, said, "but it brings up deep, difficult themes with an ending that is an absolute payoff."

Tom Stoppard, who wrote "Arcadia," is the only playwright ever to have been interviewed in "Scientific American," MacFarland, associate professor of theater, said. The complex subject matter that

"Arcadia" presents for the actors involved makes K-State one of the first colleges to ever attempt it.

This is a brilliant but difficult play, and we're very humble about doing it," MacFarland said, "but this is such a fabulous play that we decided to take the risk and bring this play to Manhattan.

Stoppard, who also co-wrote "Shakespeare in Love." began his idea for "Arcadia" after reading the book "Chaos" by James Gleick, while thinking about romanticism versus the Enlightenment. He combined these varying interests into a plot with two storylines, switching back and forth through seven acts, from early 19th century to the present day.

George Stabropoulos, who plays Captain Bryce, the dim-witted naval captain, said "Arcadia" is written with a genius paralleling William Shakespeare's great works.

"There is a mass of several different themes," Stabropoulos, freshman in theater, said. "At first glance, everything is so crazy, but somehow, the stories fit chaotically together.

Some of the underlying themes in this drama are the history of landscape gardening, the second law of thermodynamics, and Lord Byron, the poet, but deeper in the ideas of the play is the battle of free will versus determinism, the search for knowledge, and death, MacFarland said.

"It's about dealing with death and what loss means to the human race on a cosmic scale and, also, on a personal level," MacFarland said. "Stoppard doesn't give answers to these questions, but just puts them out there for us to think about."

The costumes were designed and handcrafted to specifically fit each character, Dana Pinkston, costume designer, said.

The costumes establish the period, and make it clear to the audience when it is 1809 or when it is present day," Pinkston, associate professor of theater, said. "Particular costumes, such as Lady Croom's, has a theme and tells the audience her mood at that moment.

Discussion of costume design has been under way since last spring, but rehearsal only lasted for seven weeks. Dan Hines, who plays the mathematician Valentine, said finding passion for his role was sometimes hard.

"It's more common to have to act a passion of love or hate for someone," Hines, sophomore in theater, said,

"but to find passion in Valentine's abstract ideas of mathwas tough.

With the help of Jerry Reeck, professor of biochemistry, five of the performances will have a pre-perfomance lecture and discussion at 7 p.m. from K-State professors about some main themes of "Arcadia." On April 27 there will be a post-performance reception in Nichols sponsored by President Jon and Ruth Ann

"This play has become an all-university activity," MacFarland said. "Arcadia' is about so many things that makes up what a liberal arts education should encom-

Poets to compete in UPC-sponsored contest

By KECIA N. SEYB

Kansus State Collegian

Students with a flair for poetry will present their written works at 8 p.m. Thursday evening at Java Espresso & Bakery in Aggieville for cash prizes.

The Union Program Council's Arts Committee is sponsoring its first poetry contest and has been accepting poetry submissions for the last two weeks. The deadline for submission was April 13.

The committee has been working to select the top 15 writers from about 60 entries to read Thursday, said Ken Zook, graduate student adviser for the Arts Committee.

Three cash prizes will be awarded -$50 for first place, $30 for second place and $20 for third place. Each student was required to pay $2 to enter one poem and $1 for each additional submission, Zook said.

Since most students entered two poems, there actually could be about 30 poems read Thursday, Zook said.

"We didn't know it would be this popular," he said. "Based on the successof this, we will be continuing the contest."

Megan Hughes, incoming chairwoman for the Arts Committee, said she also was surprised by the popularity of the contest and the high number of submissions.

"I was kind of worried about it," she said. "I wasn't sure if a lot of people would feel comfortable sharing their own poetry something that's kind of personal."

The poetry contestants, who had to agree to reading their works aloud when entering, will read their poetry from the back of Java by using a sound system, Zook said.

Amanda Harms, outgoing chairwoman, said the fluctuating participation in the readings sparked the idea for a contest with cash prizes to increase students' involvement.

"We wanted to try to get the literature community involved in UPC events," she said. "We want to try to get people interested and let students with an interest in poetry get involved and share their work."

Harms said she thinks there should be a good turnout for the poetry competi-

"When they entered, they had to be available for this night," she said. "Even if they aren't reading, they'll probably want to hear who made the top 15."

Chris Roberts, freshman in journalism, entered two of his poems in the contest. Cash prizes are an added benefit, he said, but they didn't motivate

"I guess you always want to know how good you are," he said. "I just kind of entered on a whim."

The poems had to be no more than 500 words, typed and titled. The poems did not have to follow a certain theme. Roberts said he entered serious poems one that is fictional and one that is ponfictional.

"A lot of my poetry is very personal,"

he said. "It's kind of like my interpretation of the world and things around me - the world filtered through me. It's all serious. There's maybe one or two funny ones outof the billions I've written."

Roberts said he's pretty confident he'll make the top 15, but he said he either wants to win first place or just lose - no in-between for him.

"I just want to know that I'm really good or that I need to work harder," he said. "If I don't make it, then I know that perhaps I need to go in a different direction with this.

Roberts said he enjoys sharing his poetry with other people, but he is not all that excited about presenting it if he is selected to read.

"I think that you lose part of it when you read it to other people because they don't get the chance to read it themselves," he said. "And I lose the opportunity to find out how they interpret it, and that's what it's all about."

Scholars make appeal to China for prisoners' release

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - More than 350 scholars at dozens of Western universities and think tanks appealed Tuesday to Chinese President Jiang Zemin for the release of three U.S.- and Hong Kong-based researchers detained by China's state security police.

The detentions are a gross violation of Beijing's own laws as well as its commitment to abide by International human rights treaties, the scholars said in an open letter to Jiang.

By raising fears of arrest among scholarly activities." those doing research on China, they also threaten academic exchanges, they said.

"Scholarly relations have been in the forefront of the process of improving relations between China and the rest of the world," the letter said. "It is, therefore, with dismay that we view the deterioration of the climate for academic exchange and research, as demonstrated by the detention of scholars who have returned to China merely to conduct research and engage in other normal

The letter, signed by scholars from 14 countries, as well as Hong Kong and Taiwan, called on Jiang to demonstrate China's commitment to human rights and academic freedom by either immediately releasing the scholars or by promptly giving them the opportunity to defend themselves in court with international standards of due process.

The three detained scholars

-Gao Zhan, a Chinese-born sociologist at American University in Washington, who was detained Feb. 11 and has been charged with spying. The appeal to Jiang said Gao had been kept in isolation and denied access to legal counsel.

-Li Shaomin, an American citizen and a business professor in Hong Kong, who disappeared Feb. 25 after going to China to see a friend. His wife said he was picked up by security agents. Chinese authorities have not commented on his case.

-Xu Zerong, a Hong Kong resident and historian who had research and teaching posts at the Guangdong Provincial Academy of Social Sciences and at Zhongshan University, in the southern province of Guangdong, when he was detained. He has a doctorate from Oxford University.

Gao's case caused a diplomatic uproar with Washington because her husband and 5-year-old son, who is a U.S. citizen, were detained with her and kept separately for 26 days before being released. Chinese officials failed to inform the U.S. Embassy of the son's detention.

China, on Tuesday, reiterated its accusations against Gao.

"Gao Zhan accepted espionage commissions from overseas intelligence agencies and, also, engaged in spying activities on the motherland. The evidence is solid.

She has confessed, and the relevant bodies are carrying out an investigation according to law," China's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Zhang Qiyue said in a routine briefing Tuesday in Beijing.

Zhang said she had no word of recent developments in the case against Gao.

Stadium project nearing completion

Majority of construction to be finished by mid-July.

By DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

K-State baseball might have its field of dreams this season, but it could be mid-July before the entire stadium project reaches completion.

Jeff Steele, assistant athletics director for event management, said construction crews will hold off on certain stages of the $3.5 million project, particularly landscaping and lighting, until other phases near final-

Those two phases, numbers three and four on the project blueprints, include work on both the suite/press level and the coaches' offices, which are being constructed by the contractor - Wichita-based Coonrod & Associates, Construction, Company,

Athletics Director Max Urick said the sixth phase of lighting, done through Musco Lighting, Inc., will be a two-part process. Two new poles, costing $57,000 each, will be erected on each side of the grandstand, while the candle power of the existing lights will be both enhanced and increased.

Yet, Steele said it's important to hold off on those lighting enhancements until the contractor finishes its job on site.

"We've got two new poles, and with construction going on and construction traffic, there's the possibility that even if we got them up they might be damaged," Steele said.

"It just didn't fit in as far as where things were going constructionwise. We thought it was best to wait on those. Rather than try to do it wrong.

wait a little while and do it right." That patience pertains to the landscaping process as well, Steele said. "Once you get the heavy equipment out, you're able to do the fine landscaping to it." he said. "Once you get your shrubs and everything planted, you don't run the risk of damaging them by moving equipment and other things that you might need.

Nevertheless, Ernie Barrett. director of development for intercollegiate athletics, said he's still looking for a means of funding both the lighting and landscaping phases of the project. Money for all other phases of the project has already been raised.

Although funding for the two new poles is already set on a fiveyear lease-purchase basis, more money is needed to erect them and increase the existing candle power. The search for a landscape architect willing to donate services also continues.

Both the lighting and landscaping are the last two phases expected to be completed in the project, Steele said.

UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Phases one and two are the only completed thus far.

The field and original seating bowl have been done for more than a year, while the locker room area recently was occupied after receiving fire code approval in Players now have access to a players' lounge equipped with a big screen TV and a desk with two computers. The training room. with whirlpool and an entrance to the field level, also is complete, as are the shower/restroom facilities.

That entire area will be connected by a center corridor to the three coaches' offices, the conference room, reception area and a small coaches' locker room.

A weight room behind the opposing team's dugout was originally the fifth phase of the project. but that stage remains under discussion. Steele said K-State will have to make a decision by mid-May whether to complete this part of the plan or hold off until four or five years down the road.

After all, the Wildcat baseball squad has other access to weight facilities, including those in both the Vanier Sports Complex and

KPL, KGE file for rate increases

By AMY MORGAN

Kansas State Collegian

An application filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission by KPI. Gas Services and Kansas Gas and Electric Co., both divisions of Western Resources, requesting an annual increase in retail electric rates might have customers sweating it during the upcoming summer months.

The increase in electric rates would generate $93 million, or a 19percent increase, for KPL customers and a 10 percent increase for KGE

The proposal would be used to recover increased fuel costs for its power plants and increased operating and maintenance costs. It also would be used to attract capital and earn an adequate return on equity to protect their financial integrity, according to a KPI, and KGE brochure. It also said the increase would recover KPL's investment in new generating facilities needed to meet customer demand.

Public hearings have been scheduled and are underway concerning the electric rate increase. They allow customers to ask questions regarding the proposal, as well as give personal statements to the KCC. Written comments from KPL and KGE customers also will be accepted through May 16. The KCC will have a technical hearing concerning the requests at 9 a.m. May 17 in the main hearing room at the KCC's Topeka office. A decision on the issue must be reached by July 25 by the KCC.

Tickets remain for circus Thursday in Weber Arena

The Isis Shrine Circus is pulling into town Thursday.

The show begins at 7 p.m. at K-State's Weber Arena and will feature animals, a tight rope performance and other entertainment acts.

Jessica Ferbeyre, receptionist at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said those interested in purchasing tickets may do so at Manhattan Town Center, Dillons Stores, A Cut Above, Wal-Mart, Alco or Pop's Collectables.

Tickets are $3.50 for children under 12 and $7 for ages 12 and above.

Randy Crow, Manhattan Town Center's marketing director, said ticket sales have been great so far.

"The unusual thing about ticket sales for the circus this year is that we have sold twice that amount that we usually do," Crow said. "This is great news."

U.S. threatens to cease negotiations with China

WASHINGTON, D.C. - After a rocky first round, the United States is threatening to break off talks with China on U.S. surveillance flights unless the Chinese start discussing the return of the Navy reconnaissance plane.

The United States hopes to gain from the talks in Beijing at least the return of the aircraft that made an emergency landing in southern China April 1. The crew was held for 11 days and released only after protracted negotiations.

"Nothing was settled. ... There was no progress on the issue of return of the airplane," department spokesman Richard Boucher said after the opening 2 1/2-hour session.

Doctors ready to install 1st mechanical heart

WASHINGTON, D.C. Sometime in the next 10 weeks, an American on the brink of death from cardiac failure will receive a self-contained, battery-powered mechanical heart that researchers hope will sustain life for at least 60 days.

Heart surgery teams at five hospitals are trained and poised to remove a failing natural heart and install the first total replacement artificial heart designed to fit inside the chest without connections through the skin.

Officials of Abiomed Inc., which developed the mechanical heart, said Wednesday that the first surgery, probably before the end of June, would proceed without prior announcement and that the patient's identity may not be released. Results of the procedure, they said, would not be made known to the public for at least 30 days.

Gas officials blamed for Hutchinson gas blasts

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - A lawsuit against Western Resources alleges company officials knew gas was leaking from Yaggy field before selling the storage facility to Kansas Gas Service four years ago.

Gas traveled seven miles from Yaggy storage field before erupting in gas geysers in Hutchinson on Jan. 17 and 18. Two people were killed in an explosion at a mobile home park, and two downtown businesses were destroyed in another explosion. Western Resources owned the storage facility before selling it to Kansas Gas Service and its parent company, ONEOK, in 1997.

Attorney Stan Juhnke said Tuesday that the plaintiffs in the case have information indicating that the storage field was leaking before the 1997 sale.

Sign language blamed for bus safety problems

BRANCHBURG, N.J. - A 12year-old girl with impaired hearing was ordered to stop using sign language on her school bus because administrators said it was creating a safety problem.

Danica Lesko's parents said they are filing a complaint with the state education department.

The Leskos have already sued over an incident they said caused the girl's hearing damage, when another student set off a bottle rocket in a hallway in November.

Stony Brook School Principal J. Harry Westerholm told the couple in a letter March 30 that the girl would be suspended for three days if she did not stop signing.

"Sign language, or any behavior, is not permitted if it is going to cause a disturbance on the bus," Westerholm said Tuesday. - The Associated Press

Spring fever solution

UPC Outdoor Adventure Committee sponsors Outdoor Awareness Day; new Union Plaza dedicated

By COLLEEN FOOTE

Kansas State Collegian

Spring is in the air, and a common place to find spring fever on campus is the Union Plaza.

Lovers of the outdoors gathered Wednesday at the Union Plaza for the annual Outdoor Awareness Day sponsored by Union Program Council's Outdoor Adventure Committee. Numerous events, vendors and activities were on display during the event to attract attention to the outdoors.

One thing that made this year's Outdoor Awareness Day different was the newly renovated Union Plaza. A dedication ceremony with a ribbon-cutting took place in front of the water feature to honor the newly completed outdoor area.

Ben Hopper, senior in agricultural communications, said during the dedication speech that the finished project will become the new campus centerpiece.

"It's already starting to become our campus' new gathering place," said Hopper, president of the Union Governing Board. "It's great, and we've already seen a lot of students begin to gather and study here. It's definitely a big improvement from the street that used to be here."

A performance by the K-State Singers and Men's Glee Club and a sidewalk chalk mural contest also were part of the day's activities.

Emma Lansdowne, 1, chalked colorful pictures on the Plaza's patio during the afternoon.

"She loves to be outside, and campus is a great place to visit when it's warm," Heather Lansdowne, Emma's mother, said. "It's nice they have activities for everyone to enjoy here."

A portable climbing wall was provided for those interested in rock climbing.

"The wall is definitely an eye catcher," said Walter Bleser, senior in civil engineering and member of the Outdoor Adventure Committee. "It's not every day you walk outside the Union and see a 20-foot wall."

Bleser said the climbing wall is just one example of how the Manhattan area offers a variety of outdoor activities.

"We just want to spread awareness that there are things to do in Manhattan besides watching football and drinking," he said. "There's camping, fishing, climbing and lakes around here."

The Pathfinder was one of the businesses that came to support Outdoor Awareness Day. Clark Peters, assistant manager of The Pathfinder, said college students are an important part of its customer base,

"We're here showing what we have to those who are interested," Peters said

"I'm glad they do it, and it says a lot about K-State that they put forth the effort to make this day possible.

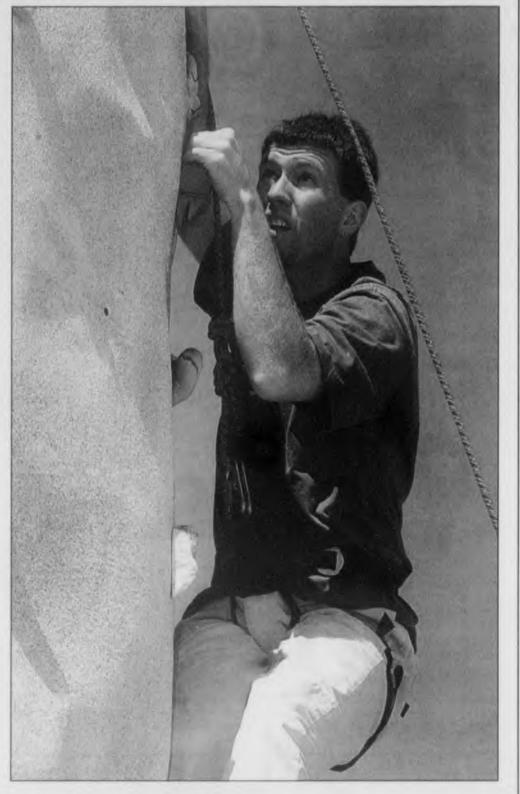

Anne Hanzlick, junior in microbiology, said Outdoor Awareness Day helps students realize that K-State offers a variety of organizations and clubs for rock climbing and mountain biking.

"We want to make people aware that there are things to do," she said. "We want to extend outdoor activities to the campus and the community."

The best thing about Outdoor Awareness Day is just being able to be outside, James Taylor, freshman in fine arts, said

"Enjoy the light." Taylor said. "Come outside, and play in the sun."

Jason Baldridge, Junior in public relations, takes his try at the portable climbing wall, provided by the Union Program Council for those interested in rock climbing. EVAN SEMON/Collegian Cobb was born May 15, 1981, in Denver. He graduated from Kent Denver School in 1999 and was involved in United Black Voices. He is survived by his parents, Andrew and Gena Cobb, of Denver.

In 1998, Cobb wrote his feelings on his future and where he sees himself in 20 years:

"In 20 years, I hope people will be saying that I am still a devout and active Christian; a person of integrity, honesty, kind, giving and, most importantly, a good human being. Also, that I have maintained the respect of my family and peers as an outstanding role model in the community as well as a successful and loving husband and father."

Question for Thursday

Should states be able to incorporate the confederate flag in their offical flag?

Past transgressions might evoke moral dilemmas

Got a question for you. Help me out here. Let's say there's a guy at the end of the block who you barely know - you say "hi" when you pass, you don't really talk, but you know he paints floral landscapes. Exquisite, breathtaking landscapes filled with radiant foliage in painstaking detail. Really good stuff. He sells them cheap, and you've got a blank spot of wall that is just dying for a painting. And then, when you're walking home one night, from a distance you see him beat his kid through a window. Just a second, just a swing of the arm. That's all you see. Do you still buy the painting?

Ignore the pressing immediacy of the attack, if you can - it's out of your hands, not the point. What if he'd been shoplifting? Shoplifting bread for his family? Shoplifting porno mags? Well, you'd probably still buy the painting, right?

Either there is that point at which the work itself carries with it a taint from the soul of its creator - some unforgivable act that makes you stand up and say, "Nope, not gonna buy it" - or there isn't and the art carries no moral current underneath the oils or printed page or whatever medium there is.

Last year, for the first time, Israel allowed a concert of Richard Wagner music. It wasn't without debate or protest - an 80-year-old Holocaust survivor stood up during the performance and shook a noisemaker only to be escorted out of the concert - and that's more than understandable. Wagner often is described as a passionate anti-Semite and was Hitler's favorite composer - his music could be heard during Nazi rallies or, later, in the darker shadows of the death camps.

For some of us, "Ride of the Valkyries" evokes 'Apocalypse Now" — helicopter gunships charging in out of the sun, Robert Duvall grinning like a Cheshire cat in fatigues - it rings of adrenaline and fury and being part of the righteous hammer of God. For some of us, though, it > evokes things the rest of us, I think, will never fully understand. It's a connection not only to the darkest moments in human history, but to the worst possible aspect of the human condition - an awareness that even the most exemplary talents in one field can be reflective of the worst our species can become.

Hrmph. Having evoked Wagner, it seems silly to bring up Dave Sim now.

Sim's no composer. He's a comic-book writer, and a pretty good one at that. He writes "Cerebus," a 300-issue epic (the man's got a goal) periodically published in a collected form, who also happens to have very, erm, interesting views on sexual/gender identity. It reads like a sexually frustrated version of the Unabomber manifesto. I'd summarize it, really I would, but right now I'm sick, and his little diatribe is dead crap on a stick, and for me to thumb through it would be to provoke projectile vomiting and general nausea, so no, I will not do that for you. Bite me.

Just trust me - the man's drawn one too many aardvarks in his day. Maybe someone finds him profoundly insightful and ultimately correct, and maybe they sleep in a pool of paint thinner.

"Tangent" at

Question is, do I bother reading his "Cerebus" books? I've heard good things about them from very insightful people. Do we listen to Wagner?

Do we approach the art of imperfect people with open minds? Do we necessarily owe them that?

No, I don't think we owe anybody anything. But (assuming commodification doesn't apply -I'm guessing Wagner's not getting paid if someone buys his albums) if our goal as people is to broaden who we are, what we know and understand ourselves more, exploring artdespite the flaws or transgressions committed by the artist - allows us to do that better. If we choose not to explore an artist because of their views, fine. We don't necessarily owe them a second chance.

But maybe we owe one to ourselves, sometimes.

McCulloh's honesty, dedication will be missed

When Karen McCulloh lost in her run as an incumbent for the position of city commissioner, Manhattan lost as well.

I have been fortunate (OK, you can stop laughing now) to attend several Manhattan City Commission meetings in the past and have been able to watch McCulloh in action. She was, and still is, a woman of grace who chose her words carefully. McCulloh is intelligent and determined. She truly cares about the community.

McCulloh was elected to the City Commission in April 1997 to a four-year term. She served as mayor for one year, beginning April 2000. She has served on countless committees and groups, as well as working at Hale Library.

On Tuesday night at the City Commission meeting, McCulloh's term as mayor ended. Commissioner Roger Reitz. said some very positive things about her. The one that sticks out the most is when he said, "I have been a better person for having worked with her and having known her.'

She did not just have one issue she devoted her time to - she had several. McCulloh focused on everything from substandard housing to traffic issues. She was concerned with the safety of people who lived in dangerous environments. She spoke to my Public Affairs Reporting class earlier this semester and said the city needs to take more of a proactive, instead of a reactive, stance on issues such as the rental inspection program. That seemed to be the basis for how she ran her campaign.

While she was in office she faced a lot of heat in terms of voting for the removal of the Ten Commandments Monolith from City Hall. I personally disagreed with the removal, but I still admired McCulloh for going against the petition that was filed against her and the election to keep or remove her from office due to this issue. In public she still had a commanding presence, still held her head with dignity as some members of the community she loved, the community she had worked so hard for, back lashed against her.

The thing that was most admirable about McCulloh was her ability to stay realistic. She did not promise to cut taxes when she ran for office this last time because she knew of how unlikely that would have been. Perhaps McCulloh was too honest, too candid to be what some would consider a good politician.

At the meetings, she knew the information, including different angles and approaches to the issue. She did not wait until the meeting to ask a lot of questions, she asked them before, studied her material and was able to conduct and take part in an intelligent discussion as a result. Some of the other leaders in the community need to follow this example.

She is a woman who I long to be like someday. A woman who sticks to her beliefs, while listening to others. She reminds me of a wonderful combination of Eleanor Roosevelt and Erma Bombeck.

The quote that reminds me of McCulloh's work is by Patrice Lamumba, "It is quite easy to shout slogans, to sign manifestos, but it is quite a different matter to build, manage, command, spend days and nights seeking the solution to a problem.'

McCulloh made up for those of us who do not do enough for our community. On election night, I was present when she found out she had lost.

But Manhattan had a far greater loss. The Little Apple suffered the loss of the removal of another public official who actually gave a damn about the people she represented.

Student trends focus of study Eisenhower to be honored

By LYNNE HERMANSEN

Kansas State Collegian

High levels of stress might accompany the current generation of college students because they feel greater pressure to achieve success.

This is one of many findings from Fred Newton's research on students entering college in the 21st century.

"What we found are just some examples, and they are not meant to be stereotypes," said Newton, director of University Counseling Services. "We just wanted to give students and faculty an understanding of the current student."

The idea for the study came about when Newton and some of his colleagues began discussing presentday college

"We realized that college life is way more different than it was in the past,"

Newton's recent article in the journal About Campus, "The New Student," is part of an ongoing series he started 20 years ago.

The research was obtained through interviews, case studies and focus groups from more than 30 schools. Two hundred students from the new student orientation classes and the Human Needs class at K-State were used in the focus groups.

"We eventually evolved a stockpile of information. Our methodology was not random," he said. "We went about more like journalists. We found leads and then elaborated upon Newton also gathered background information on current trends, then used that information to develop more questions for students.

The study found current college students to be the most informed generation with a high technological proficiency. They also were found as a generation with less commitment to studying and a higher propensity to avoid laws and rules

Sarah Hanzlick, sophomore in psychology, said she thinks the research is a good idea as long as there is a purpose for the application.

"I would agree with what I know

Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, has been researching students entering college in the 21st century as part of an ongoing study started 20 years ago.

- especially with the Internet and our high levels of communication." Hanzlick said. "But it is unfortunate that the other values are not necessarily stressed as part of success,"

Newton said the research can help both students and faculty.

"It can give them ideas on how to adapt their teaching methods to the students' preferable ways of learning." he said. "Today's students prefer to learn visually over reading and Hanzlick said she believes it's true that students learn better visually.

"I think it depends on the person, but I do know the academic world has not catered to visual learning," she said. "It is good to know, though, that they are taking notice and trying to adapt."

Associate dean of student life Carla Jones said she is looking forward to reading the article

"I think we can learn from research like this in order to assist students and anticipate their needs," she said. "Then we could perhaps set up services and programs to address those needs."

Thursday's symposium will feature a Landon Lecture by Stephen Ambrose, noted historian and bestselling author.

The distinguished guests will review Eisenhower's life as the 34th president, his younger years growing up in Abilene, his education at West Point Military Academy and the evolution of his famous military

"Eisenhower embodied American values and mission at mid-century," said Jack Holl, professor and head of the Department of History. "He is known best for his military leadership, and his presidency embodied America's longing for peace and stability in the nuclear age.

"We will evaluate Eisenhower as a defining symbol for his age, deconstruct the social and cultural milieu of the 1950s and analyze the interrelations between civil liberties and the national security state in Cold War America."

Additional symposium sessions include "Forming the Greatest Generation," "Eisenhower, Leader in War and Peace," "Culture of the 1950s" and "Civil Liberties and the National Security."

Officials discuss future of K-State

By HEATHER GRACE

Kansas State Collegian

Ideas for a master plan for K-State's campus development over the next 50 years was unveiled to Manhattan residents Wednesday night at City Hall.

For a year and a half, the campus development committee and facilities worked with HNTB Architects, Engineers and Planning. Personnel have been listening to the ideas of K-State students, faculty and staff about what they see for the future of K-State's development.

Kevin King, associate vice president of HNTB, said it's the community's turn to voice their opinions.

"We want to show the community what's happening on campus, so we can see what their vision for their edge of campus might be."

The issue discussed most by Manhattan residents concerned possible changes to Jardine Terrace Apartments.

King said the tentative plan is to turn the current area into neighborhoods on campus that would include scholarship houses, townhouses and family housing with provided child care facilities.

Dave Manning, member of the Goodnow Neighborhood Association, said he is concerned about the effect of the housing on older neighborhoods and hopes the university will address these housing needs.

"As neighbors, we accept the fact there's a blend of students and families in our neighborhoods, and we hope to maintain a Forum reachable There will be a forum balance,"

MOVING FORWARD

As far as the continuing masonry work on the outside of the stadium is concerned, Steele said things are moving ahead of schedule.

"Part of it has to do with the fact that we've gotten improved weather," he said. "A couple of weeks ago, they were able to put plastic up and heat the area where they were doing it. So we were able to move along a little bit faster than we had anticipated."

Plus, all of the stone - donated by Bayer Stone, Inc., of St. Mary's is on site, which had previously had been one of the main hold-ups in the construction process. Since much of Max Bayer's stone is given as a giftin-kind, though, it was difficult to pressure a company that's giving the university something for nothing, said Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage.

"Max Bayer has given us a whole lot of stone for our projects around here," Thomas said. "He's been very, very, very good to us, so we're real sensitive to his time schedule. I don't know how many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of stone we've gotten."

In fact, with this and other gift-inkind donations, Urick said K-State actually will get the $3.5 million project for only $2.8 million. Ninety percent of the funding for the facility was generated through private gifts, while the remaining 10 percent came from athletic department revenues assigned to it, Urick said.

The limestone masonry hasn't been the only slowed operation in the stadium project. The suite/press level also fell victim to a mixup in orders, Steele said.

More than two months ago, when the contractor got its first shipment of roofing materials, it didn't contain the eves and joint parts to get started. It wasn't until two and a half weeks ago that all the parts finally

"We kind of got our parts in the wrong order," Steele said, "so now that we've got it all in, it's going a little faster."

The roof is now three-fourths of the way on, and once fully secured, which Steele said should occur in the next eight to 10 days, weather permitting, the area can be waterproofed and all the interior work can be completed.

Work on the coaches' offices, Steele said, also is moving along quite well.

"It gives you a traditional feel," Steele said. "Baseball's a traditionaltype sport. And the fact to say we're the only one in the nation is kind of neat - kind of unique."

AWAITING COMPLETION

Overall, Urick said the more than two-yearlong project will be well worth the wait once it's finally completed.

"It will turn out to be a really great facility, and while it was a short-term inconvenience, I think the long-term benefit by far outweighs the inconvenience we experienced.

"I think we will be well rewarded for our patience."

Mississippi NAACP official Deborah Denard said the vote means the state will have to be dragged along kicking and screaming into the 21st century.

"Mississippi is kind of acting like children in that regard," Denard said. "They know that the Confederate banner has to go eventually, but they have to cling to antiquated ideas about what constitutes honor and dignity."

Gov. Ronnie Musgrove supported the new flag, saying the racially divisive Confederate symbol could burt business. After the vote, he said: "It's important that we accept the majority vote and move forward with the business of bringing new jobs and better opportunities to all Mississippians."

Even though Mississippi lacks the drawing power of a major city like Atlanta, tourism-related businesses employ 94,000 people and pumped $6 billion into the state economy last year. Gambling at 30 state-regulated casinos accounted for $2.62 billion of that.

model, Marvin Burris, director of fiscal affairs, said. The new model gives more control to its six regents schools than it has in the past.

In the recommendation to the board, the proposal would allow tuition rates to be revisited after the state legislature approved its

"For example, if they decided not to give us any funding, that would be catastrophic. Then the board could decide to revisit its tuition decision and see if it needs to do something about it," Burris

The current system allows rates to be revisited and increased by the board if needed. This board exercised this right when it revisited tuition rates in December 1999. The rates were increased after Gov. Bill Graves called for a one-percent budget cut across the board Members of the board also discussed setting tuition in April or May for the next fiscal year. Former K-State Student Body President Jake Worcester said this option is concerning.

"I think our concern as students is that if we moved it clear back to April or May, right before fall, they will see what the state has recommended - now there are advantages to that, but the biggest disadvantage is if the state doesn't fund us at the level we want, then that makes it that much easier for the board to say,

'Well, we didn't get the funding we want, so we'll raise tuition more.' Whether that would happen with this board, I don't know, but we can never predict the future."

Worcester said it is important to keep tuition as low as possible to keep K-State and other regent universities fairly priced.

"We want to maintain K-State and all the other regent universities as a good buy, and right now, it is," he said. "If tuition goes up, it

As for the possible budget cuts the regent schools are facing, Burris said he is unsure of how they would affect tuition. However, he didn't rule out the option of increasing rates.

"It's not out of the realm of possibility, but there's been no discussions of doing that over the last several months, and we've known the possibility existed that there could be some revenue shortfall," Burris said.

VARYING style

Hemp, rings among today's most popular accessories

By KATIE LANE

Kansas State Collegian

From hemp to brooches to rings, the current accessory trends vary as much as each consumer's

Jay Nelson, owner of the Strecker-Nelson Gallery, said their most popular accessories are brooches. Taking nature and incorporating it into jewelry is also is a very popular trend, he said.

"It is like wearing a shaped painting," Nelson said. "Feathers are the most popular. They are lighteight and most unusu

Nelson also said he hasn't seen any color trends, but he has noticed people are tending to buy clunky accessories. Consumers are veering away from the more delicate items and are choosing accessories that are large.

of beads to create just the right hemp jewelry. "People are looking for items that will make their body look smaller in comparison. Just like with shoes, people buy tall, clunky shoes that will make their ankles look smaller. Big jewelry makes you appear more delicate," he said. Lin Rose, owner of Krystallos, took a different point of view on the latest trends. She said the style of jewelry is becoming smaller. "The same basic things stay the same, but especially with earrings, I have seen them getting smaller," she said.

Rose said the most popular item selling at Krystallos is rings. The reason for this is that rings are something that all people can wear, and they have a more broad-based appeal, she said.

The most sought after accessory at On the Wildside is hemp jewelry, said Nicole Fischer, Wildside employee and sophomore in human ecology and mass communications. She said hemp jewelry, lets the buyer choose their own style to create the jewelry and that is why it is so popular.

"You can individualize the jewelry with beads that you get to pick out and we will weave it for you." scher said

Favorite items at The Wildside are pooka shell necklaces for male buyers and dainty necklaces for female consumers, she

Rose said some overall trends she sees are rhinestones and turquoise in jewelry. Fischer said they are starting to see more a of the thicker hemp necklaces.

"Some of these necklaces can get up to two inches thick," said Megan Stutheit, Wildside employee and freshman in open-option. "This is a style that is on the east coast and starting to move to the west coast."

While all three stores said they try to buy accessories from local artists, they said there aren't many artists selling in Manhattan. However, Wildside is looking to buy beads from a local artist, but right now, they still are buying from a seller who comes through town.

"A lot of our beads are from India, but we get beads from all over," Fischer said. "A big truck comes by, and we sit out in the alley, digging through all of the beads for about three hours."

Nelson said even though the gallery targets a more educated, well-to-do consumer, they still have decent prices on some of their items.

"Our buyers aren't looking to buy trendy jewelry. They don't want to walk down the street and see someone else wearing the same thing. They are looking to make a personal statement," Nelson said.

Fischer said Wildside's main target market is ege and high school age people. They also have consumers come in who have special pieces of jewelry they would like to incorporate into a necklace, she said.

The age range of consumers that buy merchandise at Krystallos varies greatly, Rose said.

"We have college students, university employees and city residents come into the store," she said. "Our store targets people from age 18 to 80 years

Each store has characteristics appealing for Wildside, Fischer said. People can come in and create their own thing using their own style, she said.

Rose said the characteristic Krystallos has that sets them apart from other accessory stores is that they carry current trends.

"We try to stay on the cutting edge of fashion. We want items that are new and different that you can't find at any other place in Manhattan."

Sherwood, sophomore in hotel and Wednesday morning. Sherwood said there are many challenging aspects to coxing, such as cold weather and weight restrictions, adding to the stress of the job.

marketing and varsity coxswain, has been on the Varsity 8+ team since her freshman year.

Varsity coxswains motivate crew, steer boat, set pace for team

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN

Kansas State Collegian

he women rowers for the K-State crew team might have the physically demanding aspect, but varsity coxswains
Brandy Sherwood and Mo
McGrath have the mentally tough job.

They not only control every movement of the boat and the rowers, but they have to deal with the stereotypes of being a coxswain.

"Coxing is so detailed and we just do so much," said Sherwood, coxswain of the second varsity boat. "People say, like, 'Oh, you are the ones that say 'Row, row,' and I just laugh. They don't understand."

Head crew coach Jenny Hale said a coxswain's primary function is to steer the boat. From there, they call out directions, encourage their crew and create a blueprint for the race. No one in the boat moves unless the coxswain has told them to do so.

"Steering is not easy," Hale said. "The steer is a two-or-three inch round fiber glass, so it is really small. They have to keep the boat straight at all times because any subtle movements makes a difference.

"The role of the coxswains is more intellectual. They have to use their voice, instincts and intuition. A great coxswain makes all the difference in the world. They are 110 pounds of weight adding to the boat. They must steer, motivate, call and strategize, and if they are not doing that, then that 110 pounds should be doing something else."

But the women haven't slowed anything down. The Varsity 8+ team, coxed by McGrath since her freshman year, finished fourth in the grand finals at the San Diego Crew Classic on April 8. The finish qualifies the team for the Cal Cup Grand Finals.

Hale said the efforts the women put into the details has made a difference in the team's unison.

"The girls are willing to go into the mind of their oarswomen and feel what they feel," Hale said. "If they don't develop that relationship with the rowers, it stops at the surface level. But they are willing to go under that. It is important that they identify with what the rowers are going through physically."

McGrath said it is her job to be completely aware of her total surroundings. Since she can only see the first two rowers, she has to sense what the other rowers are doing.

"It is really important to feel the rowers," she said. "That basically sets our calls. We are not just noisemakers or cheerleaders. We are like mini-coaches. It is our job to correct a stroke if we see a blade doing something wrong. "So many people think that we are cheerleaders or just there to set the pace, and that is not it at all. We constantly have to be aware. We have to be aware of everything around us. If we take our eyes off for even a second, the boat could be moving. You could clash oars with another boat if you take yourself out of the game for just a second."

Coxswains also have to use their imagnations. McGrath said motivating a crew takes some creativity.

"A good way to motivate and really make them dig in is by using power tens," she said. "We take all of our power, even more than the intense power they are already producing, and solidify it in ten strokes.

"I also use specific calls against a boat and that really fires them up. I look to see who I am across from and where I am in their boat. And then you try to get them to pull ahead of the other boat. If we don't have a boat next to us then we do a visualizing thing. We put boats next to us. We say things like, "KU is up two seats. Come on! Lets pull!"

In working together the past two years, McGrath and Sherwood have developed a strong, communicative relationship.

"She has been a excellent mentor for me here," Sherwood said of McGrath. "She has helped me so much. We think the same way a lot of the time. We work together with the two boats, and we sometimes know what the other is thinking without having to talk. We do a good job communicating and helping each other on the water."

Assistant coach Sandra Chu, who was a coxswain at Princeton University, said she noticed the women's dedication to the entire crew family.

"They have seriously taken the role as teacher or mentor for the the Novice teams. And it didn't take them long to accept that role. I see them both improving greatly. Mo was our most improved rower last year because she is willing to make changes in a day and most people can't do that."

Hale said the coxswain role also can be physically demanding. She said that often times, a coxswain could be sitting in a the boat for more than an hour.

"Their body has to be fixed and set in the boat," she said. "And that can be very difficult. It is quite demanding to sit like that for hours. Any subtle movements will affect the timing."

That's not the only challenging aspect to coxing. Sherwood said cold weather and weight restrictions add to the stress of the job. For instance, it was 28 degrees at practice Wednesday morning.

"Right now, I am wearing five layers of pants and five layers of shirts," Sherwood said. "I have learned to stay warm. I have battery-operated heated socks so I can keep my toes warm. Last year, I was actually pulled out of the boat because I was about to pass out from the cold. I get very cold because I am not moving. The rowers stay warm and we make sure we keep them warm."

Like the rowers, McGrath and Sherwood participate in their own workouts, much of it cardiovascular, to keep their weight down. Sherwood said she wants to be as close to 110 lbs. as possible, which is the coxswain standard. If a coxswain was to weigh less then 110 lbs., were then the team must put sand bags in the boat to compensate for the weight.

The demands might appear overbearing, but the diet, early morning practices and the cold weather all are worth it, Sherwood said.

"It can get difficult keeping the weight down and putting in all the hours and energy, but I love it," she said. "I love getting on a boat and being able to motivate a crew beyond what they think they can do or what others thought they can do. It is so intense, and it is so fast paced."

The feeling of complete unison makes everything worthwhile.

"I love that feeling on the water when everything is connected and you are just flying on the water," McGrath said. "That's why I do this. When everyone is focused and on, you can literally feel the focus in the boat. It is amazing."

KSU baseball overcomes Bethany, 18-1

By DAN SMITH Kansas State Collegian

K-State's improved pitching staff chalked up another victory Wednesday afternoon, 18-1 over Bethany College at Frank Myers Field.

Behind freshman Wes Vrska's solid, fiveinning, one-run performance in only his second start with the Cats, K-State improved to 17-21 on the year.

"He did a good job. Every time out, it's an educational experience for these young guys, and it's great to see him get his first win," head coach Mike Clark said.

"He did what he needed to do and kept his pitch-count low. The only way he's going to get better is to get out there and pitch, so we're real happy with him."

Vrska did his job on the mound while K-State's hitters kept the basepaths warm by tallying 11 runs and 11 hits off Swede starter Sean Winters in just three innings of work.

Both second baseman J.D. Loudabarger and outfielder Pat Maloney extended their team-high hitting streaks to 10 games, and Loudabarger collected three RBI on the day, all part of what he described as a great confidence-booster for some of the team's lesser known stars.

"It was a good win for us. We played hard, got good pitches and drove the ball well," he said.

"Any time we can get a hig win and getsa lot of "Any time we can get a big win and get a lot of guys some action, that's definitely good for us.

not only for our batting averages, but for our future because we've got a lot of young kids that need some playing time."

Clark sent a grand total of 15 different players to the plate Wednesday afternoon, and unfortunately for the Swedes, all of them seemed to find the sweet spot. Thirteen of those batters reached base at least once in the game. Even pitcher Kelvin Day, pinch hitting in the eighth inning with the Cats up 15, managed to muscle up and hit a three-run dinger to seal it.

"We won, and our goal was to get everybody in and get them some quality at-bats and to pitch some of the young guys," Clark said. "We accomplished everything that we needed to accomplish, and it was a good day's work. We got everything out of it that we wanted to."

Centerfielder Nick Sorensen was hoping for any improvement, after seeing an eight-game hitting streak come to an end followed by a five strikeout Sunday against Oklahoma last weekend.

What he got probably sufficed.
Just one double short of the cycle, Sorensen went 3-for-3 from the plate on the day, with 4

RBI to snap the so-called slump.

"It was a real tough test Sunday, and I did some soul-searching and got back today," he said. "It was all completely mental, so I just had to put that behind me and get mentally strong."

Sorensen said he was glad to be part of the Cat resurgence from the plate.

J.D. Loudabarger, shortstop, throws out a runner out at first base during K-State's 18-1 victory over Bethany. The Wildcats have improved to 17-21 on the year.

"We got some better pitches to hit. They weren't throwing as hard as we're used to seeing, and usually pitchers like that are harder to hit," he said. "We've seen a lot better arms lately, so usually you're ahead of the ball, but we sat back pretty well today and hit the ball to all parts of the field pretty well."

SPORTS BRIEFS 4 chosen for coaches' Athletes of the Week

For their efforts at the Sun Angel Classic and the Woodman Invitational last weekend, Jean-Paul Niyongabo, Annie Wetterhus, Adi Mordel and Austra Skujyte were chosen as the coaches' Athletes of the Week.

Niyongabo finished sixth in the 1,500 meters at the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz., with a time of 3:48.56.

"It was nice to see Jean-Paul show a turn of speed," distance coach Randy Cole said. "He has been progressing well in training and he gives us a wide range of events where he can score well in."

Wetterhus ran a personal-best 9:41.71 to finish second in the 3,000 meters in Tempe.

"This was a very nice personal-best effort for Annie," Cole said.

Mordel also earned a personal best by winning the triple jump with a mark of 47-5.25 at the Woodman Invitational in Wichita.

"Adi had a tremendous breakthrough this weekend," head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Finally, Skujyte made the list for the third time by winning the javelin in Tempe with a personal-best and NCAA provisional-qualifying mark of 154-10. She also won the 100-meter hurdles with a season-best 14.98.

Outstanding studentathletes commended

K-State Student Services for Intercollegiate Athletics honored student-athletes who have achieved at least a 3.0 grade point average at the fifth annual Student-Athlete Recognition Banquet at the Manhattan Country Club Tuesday evening.

Sixty-seven Academic All-Big 12 members, 12 Verizon Academic All-Americans and the Bob and Lila Snell Award of Excellence and Effort winners were honored.

"The athletic achievements of our student-athletes are often heralded in many corners, and tonight is our opportunity to recognize their superior academic efforts in the classroom," said Phil Hughes, associate athletic director for Student Services.

This year's recipients of the Bob and Lila Snell Award of Excellence and Effort were Korene Hinds, senior cross country athlete, and Terence Newman, sophomore football and track athlete. The award recognized the outstanding male and female athletes who improve their academic standing through sustained effort in their academic commitment to learning.

Higher operation prices of Parking Services might result in a hike in parking permits and meter prices.

An open meeting Thursday discussed proposed changes in parking regulations. One of those changes includes raising the prices of parking permits.

The proposal

If the proposal is passed as submitted by the parking council, student parking permits would increase from $60 to $70. Also all other parking permit prices would increase. Faculty/staff permits would increase from $85 to $90, 10-hour reserved stalls would increase from $500 to $600 and 24-hour stalls would increase from $600 to $750. Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said that to compensate for higher costs of operation and increased demands for quicker snow removal, permit prices have to be raised.

"We haven't raised prices for five years," Abbott said. "We need to start tying increases to inflationary rates so that the increase is slow. It wouldn't be as shocking that way."

Regents vote to set tuition at new time

By SHANNON BURKDOLL Kansas State Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday that tuition for 2003 will be set in a January-to-March time frame instead of the proposed Octoberto-November period.

Jake Worcester, president of the Students' Advisory Committee, made a request Wednesday that tuition be set in the October/November period. as opposed to the traditional May/June period, to reduce possible tuition hikes after the Kansas budget has been released.

The motion ended in a tied vote, 4-4, which meant automatic defeat. Harry Craig Ir., board member from Topeka, then made a motion to move the tuition time frame to January through March. Craig's motion was approved.

"It wasn't what we wanted," Kyle Barker, student body president, said. "It's not all that bad. It's only a one-year term. The consensus from the Student Senate at first sight is that it's not what we wanted, but it's worth a try."

It was close, said Jack Wempe, board member from Little River, Kan.

"There were good arguments for all of it," Wempe said. "We're trying to create a dialogue with the Legislature with the budget. We'd like to be involved with the budget from the beginning."

Wempe said he does not think moving the time frame will change the way the tuition rates are set.

Local school board makes budget, faculty cuts to avoid closings

All Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 elementary schools will stay open for the 2001-02 school year.

The Manhattan School Board made the decision Wednesday night after debating where to make its $1 million budget cuts.

"They decided to make cuts elsewhere, such as in staffing and programming," said Larry Liotta, Amanda Arnold Elementary School principal. "They plan on holding off on the decision for now.

A decision made, with a possible great effect, was to have 2001-02 enrolled kinder-Northview, which houses first through sixth grades, once had kindergarten classes. Seven years ago, its kindergarten program was relocated to Bluemont Elementary due to overcrowding. Now, after a decline in enrollment throughout all Manhattan elementary schools. Northview now has the room to house kindergartners once again.

This will cause a decline of 50 to 60 students in our school," said Lori Martin, Bluemont Elementary principal.

we need teachers more," he said.

Hawk said the possibility of a school being closed might be an issue again in the future. If it comes down to that, he said it wouldn't be pleasant.

Q: I want to get a dog, but I don't want to spend hundreds of dollars on one from a pet store. What is the adoption policy at the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter?

A: The adoption fee at the shelter is $25 for both cats and dogs. They also require a rabies shot and a spay/neuter deposit for the animal. The shelter can be found on Levec Drive in the Manhattan Industrial Park and is open daily from 1 to 5:30 p.m.

Viewing plans arranged for McVeigh execution

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A federal prison facility in Oklahoma City has been chosen as the site where Oklahoma City bombing survivors and victims' families will watch Timothy McVeigh's execution on a closed-circuit broadcast.

Survivors and families have until May I to reserve a seat at the Oklahoma City facility from which to watch the May 16 execution, which will be carried out at a federal prison in Terre Haute, Ind.

The Justice Department announcement Thursday came a week after Attorney General John Ashcroft authorized the closedcircuit broadcast to accommodate survivors and victims' families. About 285 people had said they wanted to view the execution; only 10 seats for victim witnesses are allowed at the execution site.

China still refuses to release U.S. spy plane

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration's demand for the return of a Navy EP-3E spy plane was discussed in the second meeting between U.S. and Chinese diplomats, but Beijing did not commit to releasing the aircraft. the White House said Thursday.

"It was a businesslike meeting." presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer told reporters. He refused to say whether the administration considered the 90-minute meeting productive but suggested that it went better than the first session, which resulted in a U.S. threat to break off talks.

"Unlike the previous meeting, we were able to complete the agenda ... which included discussions about the return of the airplane," he said. "They are talking about the return of the airplane."

However, he said Beijing had made no commitment to return the plane. That impasse will be one of "a whole host of issues" that President Bush considers in making decisions on U.S.-Chinese relations, Fleischer said.

The administration is expected to decide early next week what weapons to sell to Taiwan, which China considers its breakaway province.

Bush wants to remove U.S. troops from Sinai

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration disclosed that it wants to withdraw American troops from a multinational peace keeping force on the Sinai Peninsula but has made no final decision.

Asked Thursday about the 19year-old Sinai peacekeeping commitment, President Bush said: "We are looking at all troop deployments around the world. Where we can reduce troops without creating instability, we will do so."

Bush noted that this was his stance during the presidential campaign. "I've always felt that we're overextended" and that this strain on the military has hurt morale among the troops, he added.

"On the other hand, we have made commitments," Bush said, and the United States will not discard them without consulting with its allies and carefully presenting a rationale for troop reductions.

Rear Adm. Craig Quigley, a Pentagon spokesman, said Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld made this known in private talks with the leaders of Israel and Egypt in recent weeks. He declined to say how they reacted. Under the agreement establishing the force, any U.S. withdrawals would require approval by both Israel and Egypt. - The Associated Press

According to the husband of a Wichita woman who reportedly was involved in the incident, the 47-year-old woman and her 21year-old daughter were driving home about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday when they noticed a white car pull behind them. The driver sped up until the bumpers were almost touching, he said.

"He was flashing his lights and swerving back and forth like he wanted to go around," he said. "My wife says she was just driving the speed limit."

As the woman approached her home, the driver of the white car briefly slowed down, then accelerared, slamming into her car as she pulled into the driveway, the husband said.

The organization celebrated its 40th year at the International Student Center on Thursday evening. Peace Corps volunteers from the 1960s to the present gathered to talk about their experiences and to encourage students planning on volunteering.

Regional recruiter Kathleen Stolle said the organization focuses on a different theme every year.

"This year's theme is, 'How has the Peace Corps redefined your world?" Stolle said. "It's amazing how many people answer that their entire perspective has changed. They view people, food, culture, et cetera, in more open-minded ways."

Stolle volunteered from 1995 to 1997 in Albania, then extended a year to work in Morocco. She said she faced difficulties but enjoyed the experience for the change it brought to her life.

"I had been working as a reporter, writing five stories a day in a competitive environment." she said, "and I was burned out. It was time to move on to plan B."

With a degree in journalism, Stolle was assigned to teach high school English.

Hearing allows forum for consumers

By KATRINA HULL The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Northeast Kansas consumers were getting a chance to question utility officials and state regulators about what they pay for electricity and a proposal to increase it.

The Kansas Corporation Commission met Thursday night in Topeka for the third of four public hearings on Western Resources Inc.'s proposed $151 million rate increase. Such hearings typically begin with questions from the audience for the utility and regula-subsidiary, which would raise residential customers' rates in northeast Kansas an average 19.5 percent. For KGE, Western wants a $58 million increase, which would raise residential customers' rates in southeast and south-central Kansas an average of 10 percent.

Western requested a $93 million increase last November for its KPL

The KCC's staff recommended an increase of $262,072, or 0.2 percent, for KPL customers and a $92 million reduction, or 13.5 percent for KGE customers.

The staff's proposal narrows the gap between what KPL customers pay compared to what KGE customers pay.

In the past, Topeka officials have opposed equalizing the rates because they view it as subsidizing KGE customers, who are still paying off the $3 billion construction cost of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant outside Burlington.

Western was formed in 1992 by the merger of Kansas Power and Light Co. and Kansas Gas and Electric Co.

Western Resources is the state's largest electric utility. Its KPL unit serves about 345,000 customers. and its KGE unit, about 290,000 customers.

A final public hearing is scheduled for Thursday in Pittsburg. Kan. A technical hearing, similar to a court proceeding with arguments from attorneys and testimony from expert witnesses. is planned for May 17 in Topeka.

Cheating needs to be part of public records

f a student is caught cheating, it looks bad on their academic transcript. However, would the number of people cheating decrease if that information was made available to the public?

When an underage individual is caught drinking, they often given minor-in-possession tickets. When people are is pulled over when they are driving drunk, they often are given a drivingunder-the-influence ticket. Even when people decide they can't make it on their walk home to use the bathroom, they can get a urinating-inpublic ticket.

Such citations are public records and can be printed in the newspaper.

Maybe if those students who are scrutiny and the

TAXING reality

Skepticism key when examining Bush's proposed tax cuts, especially for states like Kansas

April 16, tax day, came and went.

Uncle Sam's favorite holiday was a day later than usual. A few people had their bank accounts lightened, and others had them fattened.

Tax day was met with great fanfare in Washington, D.C., as President Bush touted his own tax plan, a $1.6 trillion cut for all Americans. It comes as a result of a budget surplus, and after all, as Bush points out, it is the people's money.

He's right. It is the people's money. Those government dollars are each of ours.

My problem is the way he bases these massive cuts on budget projections. Bush wants to cut taxes based on 10-year projections. That all might sound too good to be true. However, Kansas is a strong example of why we cannot do this at the level Bush wants.

Here in the Sunflower State, things are quite different economically. The Legislature and state government are in an economic crunch, and the dollars are scarce. The tax cuts in the 1990s, along with other factors, have made budget cuts a necessity today.

The last tax cut was made to give the people back their money.

When tax cuts are rationed, it is because the government doesn't need a surplus. It is not its money to spend. It is the people's' money.

Kansas Gov. Bill Graves is calling for a possible tax increase to cover a $205 million budget shortfall.

Where were the projections two years ago? Did anyone believe we would be in this situation? I hope

If they did then, and went along with the cut, shame on them. However, I doubt that was the projection - it wouldn't make sense. However, one would have to question if giving a tax cut every time a state has a surplus is a good idea.

Each time Bush is on television discussing tax cuts, I get skeptical because these projections are not absolute.

As a taxpayer, it is questionable how future projections of great surpluses can

We need to discuss the variables, which must be in place to ensure a surplus. Do those variables include an economy that appears to be slumping, or would the variables necessitate a thriving stock market? You just cannot

When you think about the state of Kansas, especially, it makes a taxpayer think that maybe less

As taxpayers, maybe stability is better than a tax cut one year and an increase in another. Perhaps stability of state agencies is more important.

Take-home pay sometimes doesn't add up to all the dollars being pooled into a tax fund and distributed to programs. If we can fully fund state programs in need, with a tax increase, why not do it? If we can figure out a solid rate of tax to take care of our people, this is the responsible measure.

However, we cannot simply continue to jerk our taxpayers around every other year. The state needs a system of fiscal efficiency and needs to really evaluate how it takes in tax revenue.

Our government officials need to cease searching for the quick fix and provide tax payers with a stable

Right now, the question in Kansas is "Do we want to take care of our state or simply keep taxes low?" It is a debate that will hear up in the next week and possibly be decided faster than the filing deadline comes for late filers.

Question for Tuesday: Should states be able to incorporate the Confederate emblem in their official flag?

True discovery of self comes from all experiences

Wearing my ripped, and faded blue jeans, a white retro shirt and my $2 flipflops from Wal-Mart, I packed up my truck and began the voyage home to Johnson County for Easter.

I was going home, and I was going without any illusions. I was going as myself, and I was going to stick out. My personal premonitions quickly were distilled as I reflected on how lucky I was to spend a beautiful afternoon driving.

I love road trips. They are the times in my life when I am forced to sit and drive, listen to great music and enjoy the beautiful scenery of the rolling, pocked Flint Hills.

MICHELLE BERTUGLIA

Road trips give me the time to calculate how to persevere through whatever current chaos is plaguing my life. As I drive and sing with the windows down and my hair blowing around, I realign my soul. So, often as I cruise down

Interstate 70, clarity comes, and I am reminded of who I am, who I want to become and the journey I have taken this far. You could say road trips are like church for me, and there is nothing better than a good stretching of the soul.

As I drove Saturday, the clarity came as reflected on my destination. I love my family and friends deeply, but I hate the place where I have to visit them. It seems that by the time I have straightened out my once crinkled inner being as I pull into my parents' driveway, I am crinkled all over

Cell phones, new cars, fake tans, girls who are trying to look like Britney Spears and succeeding, and boys who are trying to look like N'SYNC tend to make me feel out of place. I find myself uncomfortable with my faded jeans and nonconforming curly hair. But it is not just Johnson County. I know going home, where ever home might be, is difficult for many. I think it is because, too often, we find ourselves haunted by memories of the past.

When I go home I see ghosts of my self lingering about. I always was that girl who tried so damn hard to figure out what the equation to coolness was. From grunge girl, to ska girl, to express girl, 1 tried on more personalities and wardrobes than one might think possible. I just wanted to fit the mold.

Even after I got to college, I still did not really know who I was. I would see these women on campus, and they amazed me. You see, they had a walk. There was something about the way they carried themselves - they extended this air that said "I have it together, I am confident, I am me. I was envious."

But after a lot of crazy experiences and about 22 years. I guess you could say I finally have grown into all five feet of me. I guess it kind of happened when I was looking the other way. But I have found that once you realize who you are, it can be rough to be who you are. It is even harder when you-tend to stick out, especially in Johnson County.

But as I neared closer to home, the advice someone once had given me quietly stepped forward into the forefront of my thoughts. A dear friend had once said to "Never have any regrets." At the time, the logic seemed so simplistic and relative. It seemed too easy to walk around the world without the accountability of having regrets. So upon hearing these words, I brushed them into the back of my memory, to be reflected on at a later date. Well, this was the later date.

Her words rang true. Through it all, the personality changes, hairstyles, groups of friends and make-up disasters that haunted me, I realized I could not regret all the searching I had been through because in the end - it had led me to me. I have learned from all of my experiences, and I am ready for a lot more in my faded jeans and retro shirt.

Saturday afternoon will kick off three days of competition for the annual Special Olympics Spring Games

The first of the games, aquatics and powerlifting, will be from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Natatorium and Ahearn Field House weight room.

"This is the second year K-State has hosted the event," said Debbi DeVenuto, northeast area Special Olympics director. "It is a great way to give the athletes a chance to show the community what they are capable of doing because it is in a central location and many have the chance to attend.

The three days of regional games serve as a qualifying round for the state competition June 1-3 in Wichita, DeVenuto said.

"All the athletes need to do is attend an area event to qualify for state," she said. "We don't just take the top three places - if you try, you

K-State looks to continue its dominance over nonconference opponents at 3 p.m. today in the first game of a three-game set against the Pac 10's UCLA Bruins at Frank Myers Field.

The Cats (17-21, 6-15) have an 11-6 mark against non-Big 12 teams so far this season, including Wednesday afternoon's 18-1 shellacking of Bethany

Head coach Mike Clark said his team will have to make some minor adjustments coming into this weekend's action against an impressive UCLA (25-13) pitching staff, but was quick to point out that his players have seen this type of competition before.

"We're going to have to adjust to 92-mph fastballs, but that's all we've seen so far this year," Clark said. "It was nice to have a game where we could get a lot of people in and let everybody relax a little bit and get them some confidence before UCLA."

Wednesday's blowout win was the right medicine for the Cats after losing the final game of last weekend's series against Oklahoma 6-2, Clark said. Most of the team's regulars in the field saw limited action against the Swedes in an effort to get some of the younger players some gametime experience and rest the team's starters for a tough weekend series against the Bruins.

'We won, and our goal was to get everybody in and get them some quality at-bats and to pitch some of the young guys," Clark said Wednesday. "We accomplished everything we wanted to accomplish. It was a good day's work, and we got everything out of it that we wanted to."

The Cats were more efficient from the plate Wednesday as well, banging out 18 hits off four Bethany pitchers. Senior second baseman J.D. Loudabarger said a similar effort will be key to K-State's success this weekend,

"That's the first time that we put a ton of runs up in awhile, and that's a big mental plus for us," he said. "Hopefully, we can keep swinging the bats well against UCLA, because that's the only way we're going to win.

"The biggest thing is to make sure we're getting good pitches and seeing the ball well. They've got good pitchers, but they're nothing better than we've seen all year in the Big 12, so I think if we come with that attitude, we'll be all right."

Loudabarger and teammate Pat Maloney both enter today's contest with team-high hit streaks of 10 games. Loudabarger extended his career-best streak by going 2-for-5 with three RBI on Wednesday.

Another part of the Cats' recent success from the plate has been junior Nick Sorensen. After seeing his season-high, eight-game hitting streak snapped against Oklahoma, the centerfielder came back with a bang against the Swedes, going 3 for 3 with four RBI and finishing a double short of the cycle.

"I think you have to go out and just play hard every day," Sorensen said. "It's baseball, so you've just got to have fun. If you get up for some games and not for others, you let not only yourself down, but everybody in the

If K-State fans are to go home happy this weekend, though. Clark will need three good outings from his improved pitching staff. With UCLA's team batting average sitting at .308 and senior Brian Baron's hovering around .500 for much of the year, Friday's starter, Kevin Melcher will have to find a way to contain the Bruin's explosive lineup from the first pitch.

Going into the weekend's matches at No. 36, the Cats' highest ranking this season, the team knows victories this weekend will require its best play. However, the team has been playing well all season, starting out at No. 43 before eventually sitting at its present ranking.

That ranking will be tested, though, as the team will finish off the season much like it started out, with some of the toughest opponents across the net.

"How we play against these teams will really show us how much we have improved since the beginning of the season," Novotna' said.

As a senior, Novotna' is going into her last regular season game for K-State this weekend. The finale is more a source of excitement rather than sorrow, though. "More than anything, I am excited for my last two matches," Novotna' said. "It has been a good year and a great experience, and I am happy with what we have

Leaving this team will leave Novotna' with fond memories and few regrets, she

Though Novotna' and her teammates know playing top-20 teams can be a good opportunity to show what they are made of. Novotna' said it is important to focus on the play more than the rankings.

"Some say you go out there with nothing to lose when you play top-ranked teams, but I don't believe that," Novotna' said. "If we go out there thinking they are better, it will be over before it starts."

Due to that mentality, the players have an understanding of what they need to do both mentally and physically

"We have improved a lot, mentally," lecminkova said. "This has made our play on the court much more consistent."

The Cats will match up against Texas-A&M at 10 a.m. Saturday and will face the University of Texas at 10 a.m. Sunday. The two matches are K-State's last before the

Junior college All-America golf player signs with K-State team Men's golf coach Tim Norris announced

Thursday the signing of Tim Moody to a national letter of intent to play golf at K-State

A native of Lindstom, Minn., Moody earned third-team Junior College All-America honors as a freshman and led Indian Hills Community College to the 2000 NJCAA National Championship. Moody also won the individual title at the 2000 regional championship, shooting rounds of 69-74 - 143.

'He has won at every level, from junior golf to high school and junior college, and I expect that to continue here," Norris said. "He will bring some leadership to our team from the fact that he has been on some successful teams. He's a long hitter with his size, and that fits today's game. The courses are getting longer and just with our course here, that's going to

New recruiting class provides Wildcats with potential

Tuesday was a good day for me.

Well, if you want the truth, it probably was a better day for the K-State men's basketball program, but I have a right to be happy as well. After all, I cover the Cats quite a bit for the Collegian - and believe me - the job's a tad more fun when the team's winning.

And it will. Three days ago, head coach lim Wooldridge released the final three names of a stellar man 2001-02 hoops recruiting class.

Height inside was a definite need for next year, with senior centers Kelvin Howell and Joe Leonard graduating. They got it.

The Cats needed another shooting guard, with Phineas Atchison as their only true perimeter player. They got it.

Heck, Wooldridge just needed players, period - enough to practice 5-on-5 at least. He got that, too.

This year's recruiting job was simply phenomenal. Not only does K-State have a great basketball staff, but one that can get good signees as well. That's the difference.

Former head coach Tom Asbury was a good coach. His winning percentage at previous schools, namely Pepperdine, was indicative of that. But he just couldn't get any big names to the university.

Take nothing away from the Cat players he signed who are still here, but it was Wooldridge's new first-year guys that made the most noise this past season. Travis Reynolds and Quentin Buchanan had pretty good years, but the difference made by newcomers like Larry Reid. Matt Siebrandt, Richie Terry and Atchison simply was unprecedented. It made me think. Just how good could a full team of Wooldridge products be?

Well, looks like I'll find out next season. Only three members of the squad (Reynolds, Buchanan and Ivan Sulic) remain from Asbury's crop of recruits, with Howell and Leonard graduating and Donnie Wallace and Kerry Darting heading their separate ways.

In fact, 11 of the players on next year's squad are Wooldridge signees. Plus, the status of Rashad Washington has not yet been determined, which would give K-State a 15-man squad. But that probably will wait until after football season to play

So there's the scenario. Now let's take a quick look at the seven-man 2001-02 recruiting class.

· Pervis Pasco and Travis Canby, 6-foot-9 big men, should more than fill the void inside left by Howell and Leonard. This was K-State's biggest area of concern heading into the off-season, and the Cats landed a good pair of stallions - Pasco from the juco ranks and Canby from Fork Union Military Academy in Virginia. . Marcus Hayes and Nick Williams, 6foot-4 combo guards, were also vital acquisitions. With Reid and Atchison being seniors next year, K-State will need youth in the backcourt, and these two true freshman will get adequate time to ease into the program.

 Gilson DeJesus, Janerio Spurlock and Marcelo Da Barrosa will also add key depth at the forward position next year. After all, with Reynolds and Sulic graduating next spring, and Siebrandt the year after, the Cats needed to plan for the future. And this isn't a bad start. Not at all.

Nonetheless, with seven signees and only five new scholarships to give out, due to the new collegiate rule passed last summer, here's the run-down on what happened.

Pasco, Canby, Williams, DeJesus and Spurlock got scholarships, and the other two got the shaft. Just kidding.

Da Barrosa actually got a scholarship as well. How, you might ask? Let me explain. Daryl Williams, who originally signed with the 2000-01 recruiting class, didn't end up coming to Manhattan due to poor acade-

In turn, since Marcelo was enrolled in class at K-State this semester, he was able to slide in and take Daryl's scholarship without it counting toward this year's fivescholarship limit. Not too shabby of a deal.

And as far as Hayes is concerned, the Oviedo, Fla., native will be a walk-on next

However, the new collegiate ruling has another stipulation besides a five-scholarship limit in a year. No more than eight scholarships can be awarded in a two-year span, which means K-State can ink three more recruits in the 2002-03 class.

But that really doesn't matter. Wooldridge used his five recruiting scholarships wisely.

Now watch for the payoff come November.

by accreditation team

Kansas State Collegian

The Riley County Police Department will be under investigation by an accreditation assessment team in a five-day process beginning Saturday.

A team of assessors from the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies Inc. will work to verify that the RCPD meets the commission's 439 standards, thus maintaining accreditation, said Sgt. Tim Hegarty, research and planning sergeant.

The team's job is to examine all aspects of the RCPD's policies and procedures, management, operations and support services.

"Our job is to have policies that say we do these standards. CALEA looks at proof that we do these things," Hegarty said.

Assessors can look for that proof in documents or in action, he said. They will review written material, interview individuals and visit other places where they can observe compliance. Assessment also can be on an individual

"They look at what kind of equipment an officer and a car should have, how officers respond to an emergency situation, how to handle an escaped prisoner,' Hegarty said. "It's a very detailed process."

RCPD first received accreditation from CALEA in 1991, becoming the first accredited agency in the state of Kansas, said Lt. Hank Nelson, official accreditation manager. It was reaccredited in January 1996.

"We were also one of just a handful in the U.S. nationwide when we first received accreditation," Nelson said.

Other accredited enforcement centers in Kansas are in Salina, Topeka and Prairie Village, he said. The assessment for RCPD is on a five-year cycle, but that will change to three years, Hegarty said. The three assessors all have law enforcement backgrounds and are trained to be assessors, he said.

More information

Community members who want to offer comments about the RCPD's ability to comply with the standards for accreditation may try the following:

 Attend a public information session at 7 p.m., Monday in the lecture hall at the Manhattan Fire Department Headquarters, 2000

■ Call 537-2112, ext. 2410 between 1 - 4 p.m. Monday.

Send written comments to the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Inc., 10306 Eaton Place, Suite 320, Fairfax, VA 22030-2201.

Each is from a different area of the country - Memphis; Washington. D.C.; and Tempe, Ariz.

"CALEA is an outside objective opinion. They come in and verify that we do X, we do Y, we do whatever," Hegarty said.

If the assessing team members come across a standard in which they question compliance, they can suggest the RCPD change it to meet their criteria, which the department most likely would be able to do while the assessors are

"If we run into a major problem in those five days, they would probably say we have X amount of time to fix this," Hegarty said. "With the amount of changes, we'll probably have small things, but I wouldn't be surprised if they left here and had nothing to say. We are most confident that there won't be anything that we can't fix."

After the assessors complete their review on the department, they report to the full commission. CALEA then will decide if the RCPD receives accreditation.

Hegarty said he is nervous, but confident about the assessment.

"We just don't know what they'll find. They won't find anything major," he said. "We don't anticipate any problems."

Nelson said being accredited with CALEA probably has helped to improve RCPD's standards.

"Overall, we're a little better off with it." he said. "It's forced us to do some things that make us better.'

RCPD to be evaluated Japanese culture to be on display

By RACHEL POWERS Kansas State Collegian

Students, faculty and community members will have the opportunity to experience the Japanese culture at the fifth Central Kansas Japanese Festival Saturday in the K-State Student Union.

The festival, which will be from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., is sponsored by the Japanese Appreciation Alliance, the Japanese Student Association and the Department of Modern Languages. Kyoko Mizuno, festival coordinator, said the festival is an effort to provide opportunities for students and community members to learn and experience the Japanese culture. "By promoting Japanese studies, and, in general, Asian studies, it is our attempt to help students prepare for global market in their future path," Mizuno, JAA and JSA adviser, said.

Mizuno said this festival will differ from past years because it is extended and will offer more activi-

"Until last year, the focus of the festival had been on the language - that is, speech contest and skits/presentations in Japanese," Mizuno said. "Ideas for this year's large-scale festival were first discussed one year ago."

Festivalgoers will be able to see demonstrations varying from origami and calligraphy to martial arts, tea ceremonies and bonsal, among others. Mizuno said there also will be a chopstick battle.

The event is free to the public. Door prizes will be given away to those who register at the event

"Thanks to many sponsors and contributors, we are able to make the event as accessible as possible for everyone interested," Mizuno said. "There are various donated items from local businesses like video tapes, CDs, gift certificates from restaurants like Harry's Uptown, Hunan Restaurant, Shogun Japanese Restaurant in Topeka and various items from Japan like flower arrangements, calendars, crafts."

Paul English, IAA president and senior in history and international studies, said he is expecting 100 to 200 people from all over the state to attend the festival.

"Those who come to the festival will have the opportunity to experience a wide range of experiences as it relates to Japan," he said.

"We will have display items that have been loaned to us from the Consulate General of Japan - like kimonos, Japanese swords and Taiko drums. We will have a variety of demonstrations that will run all afternoon to include martial arts, video games, Anime and Manga (Japanese animated films and graphic novels), Japanese word processing and a demonstration of traditional Japanese music from our visiting koto performer. Yoko Hiraoka.

English said there also will be two guest lecturers: William Tsutsui, a professor from the University of Kansas' East Asian Studies, and David Graff, assistant professor of history.

There will be an essay contest for those who write a reaction

English said he encourages people to come to the festival to learn about a different culture.

"First and foremost, it is an opportunity to learn about another culture that is not readily available to the average KSU student or Manhattan resident," English said.

"There is no denying the position of power and prestige that the Japanese hold on the world stage, so I believe that it behooves us all to learn more about a people and culture that we all will likely have some interaction with in the coming years. Finally, it's going to he fun and interactive and a great learning experience."

Stephen Ambrose, biographer and historian known for his story of former U.S. president and Kansas native son Dwight D. Elsenhower, concludes his presentation at the Landon Lecture at 2 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

"In 1948, both parties wanted him to run for president, and Harry S Truman told him that he would step down," Ambrose said. "That is unheard of."

Eisenhower, though, didn't run because of ethical concerns, but four years later he decided to run for president because of a dislike for the two candidates. He won, and Eisenhower's reign as president began. Eisenhower served as president from 1953 to 1961.

During his presidency, Ambrose said, one of Eisenhower's best attributes was his honesty. He used this honesty to deal with members of the press, and Ambrose said he always tried to tell the truth.

"I have spent a lot of my life studying Eisenhower, and my sense of admiration for him grows every day," he said.

"Now, when I am faced with a moral question. I often ask what would Dwight D. Eisenhower have

For Eisenhower's 50-year career in public service. Ambrose said he thinks Eisenhower is one of the century's top Americans.

While Eisenhower would be one of Ambrose's nominees for American of the Century, all of the members of the Armed Services who served in World War II would make that list, too, he said.

Abbott said most of the other proposed changes are to clarify misunderstood regulations.

The universities are moving toward a block-grant format, Craig

"Each university will determine what their block will be and recommend a tuition rate," Craig said. "Jon Wefald will determine what they need and how much the tuition rate should be, then recommend it."

The block format will not make a dramatic difference in the infrastructure, Barker said.

One board member suggested that in the future, tuition rates might differ by class courses, Craig said.

The board members also approved a motion to add an associate of technology degree in Web development at K-State-Salina after President Jon Wefald gave a report of campus successes and technological goals.

"Any time we can offer a different degree of curriculum," Barker said, "it's beneficial to the students."

According to the degree summary, it will be used to prepare graduates for entry-level positionsas a Web master. Its emphasis is on the technical area of programming associated with Web-page development. The new program will be funded through an internal reallocation of funds.

Also at the meeting, the American Cancer Association presented K-State and K-State Research and Extension with appreciation awards for their efforts in making mobile classrooms a success.

"It's humbling to visit the campuses and get to see all the wonderful things that are done. I get to see all the wonderful things that happen in the state and somewhat be a part of it," Craig said. "Today, in my opinion, was a walk through the park compared to some other things I'm asked to do in life.'

Interaction key to musical

Kansas State Collegian

Blending the fanfare of big stage musicals with the tongue-in-cheek humor of the popular pieces of Stephen Sondheim, the Columbian Theatre will perform "Side by Side by Sondheim" opening

The Columbian Theatre in Wamego will be host to the music revue, which is a culmination of Stephen Sondheim's works, including popular pieces from the hit musicals "West Side Story" and "Gypsy."

Orchestrating the entourage of songs is director and narrator Jeff Montague. Montague said that 25 years ago, when this music revue was introduced, it wasn't a big "Sondheim wasn't as wellknown as he is today." Montague said. "People tend to appreciate the piece so much more now because many have seen the works he has created."

Montague, the only actor with actual lines, is joined by three performers and two accompanists. Lee and Rhonda Lassiter and Kerry Butterfield fill the arena with vocals, while Marilyn Foree and Nancy Goodall accompany them on piano.

"We all work so well together." Butterfield said.

The four have performed together before and are familiar with each other's styles, Butterfield said. Four years ago, they performed "Sondheim" in the actors' native city of Topeka. The Columbian contacted the cast and then contacted them in 1999 to do the show again in Wamego.

"This show is so much different than last time," Montague said. "We have all grown so much in the past few years through the life experiences we have encountered. It is what makes us who we are today."

"Side by Side by Sondheim" features many humorous moments. including the comedic interpretations of some of Sondheim's pieces. The show follows many of the themes that Sondheim intended to express in his numerous works, Montague said.

Most of the themes revolve around relationships and, in particular, marriage, Each singer also is featured a number of times through solos and dance routines, and Butterfield said she attempts to relate to the audience through the performance.

"I love being able to play with the audience," she said. "In the songs that we have to select members of the audience, I never try to pick the ones that want to be picked. Hike interacting with ones that try to shy away when we come down into the audience."

The Columbian Theatre reopened its doors in 1994 after nearly 40 years of inactivity. Brad Merryman, stage director, said it was incredible to be a part of the reopening and renovation of the Columbian.

It took nearly $1.8 million to restore the building to the level it is at today. Merryman said the greatest part was seeing murals, which line the performance arena, now restored to their true form. The paintings are about 100 years old and took much work to clean the dirt and soot that stained them for so long.

Rehearsals have been taking place for the last four weeks in Topeka before bringing the dress rehearsals to the Columbian, and Montague said the actors are ready for an audience.

"Looking people in the eye when you perform in front of them is rewarding for the actor," he said. "That's what live performances are all

K-State rugby players to be auctioned off

April 3

Rugby player Daniel Wacker said he might show up at Auntie Mae's Parlor on Friday night in a tuxedo thong from Victoria's Secret.

Wacker, senior in public relations, and some of his teammates are going to be auctioned off to raise money for their club sport and Habitat for Humanity - and to have some fun.

The team hopes to raise enough money to buy jerseys, and it plans to donate at least 20 percent of what it earns to Habitat. For the auction, each player will display a particular theme, and Wacker said he and one of his teammates have an idea for theirs.

"We might be Chippendales," he said. "I've got a little tuxedo thong from Victoria's Secret and maybe a little bow tie - 1 might go that route. Vic Tran, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said he has no definite plans, but that he'll probably be Jesus from "The Big Lebowski," since his teammates think he portrays him so well.

"Jesus is excited." Tran said. "I thought that I'd retired Jesus. I don't know, sometimes I get really drunk, and it gets out of hand."

Two other teammates are going to portray "Two Wild and Crazy Guys" from a "Saturday Night Live" skit. Others might act like gangsters or just dress as themselves rugby players.

The rugby bachelors each will have approximately a $30 prize donated from local businesses accompanying them. Most prizes are certificates for dinner for two atlocal restaurants.

"The uglier the guy, the better the prize - girls don't really like ugly guys," Wacker said. "Some girls might get the guy just for the prize."

Door prizes also will be given out throughout the night with gift certificates from Aggieville stores like Streetside Records and Patricia's Undercover.

Once the players are purchased, their actions are up to their discretion, Wacker said. "It's up to the bachelors what they do," he said. "but, you know, guys are pretty easy.

Isaac Madison, rugby player and developmental coordinator for Habitat for Humanity, said he has wanted to bring the two organizations together, and this was a good move for the rugby team.

"It shows that the team is willing to participate in the community," he said.

About 12 of the 32 K-State rugby players have agreed to participate in the auction. Wacker said. Madison said he won't be auctioned off.

"I just had never really thought about it," he said. "Actually, I could say that I'm priceless. I've never really done anything like that before. But you never know - on Friday, I actually could show Players will go to the highest bidder, and the bidding will start at about $5.

Team members will have a quasi-stage in the basement of Auntie Mae's on which they'll strut their stuff for the auction. Wacker said. A disc jockey also will provide the music, as each bachelor will have a different song to accompany his theme.

"I've found that the more dancing, the better the dancer and the more fun it looks like they're having up on stage, the more money they get," Wacker

The ruggers selected Auntie Mae's for the site of their auction because it's where they usually go after games, Tran said.

"Auntie Mae's has always been our rugby bar," he said. "They've always given us support. Whether Chippendales make an appearance at the auction, the rugby players said they think it will be a good time while helping out a worthy cause. "It's good for us to get together and do something for others that's beneficial," Tran said, "and I'm sure beer's involved.

Earth Day activities available at park

By BENJAMIN HODGE Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan City Park will be full of education and music Saturday in celebration of Sunday's Earth Day.

"Earth Day at the Park," sponsored by Students for Environmental Action, will take place from 2 to 10 p.m. During this time, four bands will play, two K-State professors will speak, prizes will be awarded, and several booths - ranging from K-State's student representation of the Green Party to the solar car team - will be set up for visitors.

"We're trying to use this festival to increase Earth Day and environmental awareness," Steve Powell, junior in chemistry, said.

The games will begin at 2 p.m. in the park. Activities, such as a trivia contest and a recycling game, will allow people to learn about the environment and have fun. The first speaker will begin at 2:30 p.m.

At 3 p.m., Sunset Zoological Park will give a presentation on small animals. Next up are the Vetivers, a Kansas City-based band that will play at 3:45 p.m. The second speaker will begin at 5 p.m., followed at 5:45 by the local band, Brothers Green. Next, a recyclable fashion show will take place at 6:30 p.m. The Topeka-based band Effigy will play at 7 p.m., and Lythm Reed, from Joplin, Mo., will play at 8:45

"We've been planning very heavily the last couple of months," said Ben Champion, Students for Environmental Action president and junior in chemistry and natural resources environmental sciences. Champion is a member of the opening band, the Vetivers.

Champion said he is excited the Vetivers have this opportunity to play to a new crowd.

"It's going to be our debut in Manhattan," Champion said

Throughout the day, booths will be available to the visitors. The People's Grocery, the K-State solar car team, the K-State campus group Amnesty International, the Campus Greens (K-State's Green Party student group), the Kaw Valley Green House and Sunset Zoo will each have booths at the

The solar car team will have an older solar car on display, and the People's Grocery, along with having someone to talk about organic foods, might bring free samples, Champion said. A Toyota Prius, a new gas/electric hybrid car, might even be brought by a local company if it is not rented out that day, he said.

Another group helping with the event is the Golden Key National Honors Society, Champion said, which is donating money and providing volunteers. The University Program Council has helped with this event, as well.

"I think the main things we're hoping for is that it will promote earth-based thinking." Champion

Endeavor launches to install robot arm

The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -Space shuttle Endeavour thundered into orbit Thursday, carrying seven astronauts on a mission to install a massive billion-dollar robot arm on the international space station. Endeavour lifted off at 2:40 p.m., right on time.

"Good luck and have fun on the international space station," launch director Mike Leinbach told the astronauts.

It was a fine day for flying, and not just because of the good weather. Thursday marked the 30th anniversary of the launch of the world's first space station, the Soviet Union's Salyut 1.

The difference, between then and now, was especially striking, given the composition of Endeavour's crew. The astronauts come from four countries, making this the most internationally diverse space crew ever.

"Ciao, Italia!" Italian astronaut Umberto Guidoni shouted to wellwishers on his way to the shuttle. Also represented on the crew: Canada, Russia and the United States.

About 20,000 guests from around the world jammed into Kennedy Space Center for the launch, drawn by not only the international shuttle crew, but the convenient liftoff time and the Easter holiday break.

The space station was soaring over the Indian Ocean, near the Maldives, when Endeavour bolted off its launch pad and punched through clouds. The shuttle will catch up with the station on Saturday.

Quarterback Ell Roberson rushes for yards during the fourth quarter of K-State's game against North Texas University. Roberson led the team in rushing with 92 yards on 14 carries.

Dunn chases Roberson for starting quarterback position

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

arc Dunn might eventually become K-State's starting quarterback. This latest fan favorite might ultimately wrest the job from incumbent Ell Roberson and fulfill the potential he showed at Ricks College, but that time is not now, not

"Strength is directly related to muscle mass the ability to accelerate, the ability to jump, udson said. "Carrying the ball at times, the fact that he's going to be able to accelerate that much aster, and - body strength - he'll be able to take the punishment, you might say because he's got nore tissue that's going to protect him."

For the time being, Roberson is the man at the helm.

"Right now when we start the spring game, Ell will begin as the number one quarterback," head coach Bill Snyder said.

Don't count Dunn out, though, especially since he's practiced with the team less than 15 times, but still, as of now, Roberson has given the junior transfer plenty of catching up to do.

"At this point in time, it's not a neck and neck race. I think that's because Marc is in the same position that Ell was a year ago, still trying to grasp which foot to step with," Snyder said. "He made tremendous strides initially and then the more you throw on someone's plate, a little bit more disfigured perhaps they become. When you've got a fourth of the notebook, it's a little easier than it is when you've got the whole thing. As more and more came upon his plate, that tempered his progress.

he was pretty good."

"I think if he's ready to take that next step and absorb the rest of it, when that happens then I think his progress will get back on track again and I think he'll close the gap."

That gap won't be closed soon enough for Dunn, who has at times been frustrated trying to sort through the huge amount of material thrown his way. The first groups of plays weren't so tough to handle, but the learning progress slowed considerably after the entire playbook was installed.

"I just have those days," Dunn said. "One day things will feel like they are really smooth and things are going really well, and then the next day you realize you have a long way to go

"Imagine — mix five to ten plays amongst five hundred plays. The more complex it gets, the more they throw at you, the more you have to think instead of reacting as the athlete that you can be on the field. You have that tendency to hesitate or the tendency to overanalyze or the tendency to not perform to the way you usually can when you get to that complex of an offense.

Roberson, on the other hand, understands the offense better than ever. "I'm reading defenses a whole lot better," he said. "I'm picking up things that I didn't pick up last year. In fact, despite his age of 20, Roberson is now in position to speak as the experienced old man on the team. comparing the newcomers to himself when he was a younger player. Those analogies, though, are always favorable toward Dunn. "Marc may not know a whole lot of the offense, but he does great things at the quarterback position," Roberson said. "He's kind of like I was last year really didn't know too much, but I could do something, I could make that extra go. That's how he is right now, but he's picking things up a lot better than I did when I first came in.

"He has a lot, lot, lot to learn, but he's making progress and this summer, with help, hopefully he'll be ready. I think Right now when we start the spring game, Ell will begin as the number one guarterback. "

Bill Snyder, head coach

Competing in spring drills certainly won't hurt Dunn's chances. One of the 23-year-old's predecessors would have benefited from a similar opportunity. offensive coordinator and quarterback coach Ron Hudson said.

"If we'd had Bishop, we probably wouldn't have gone through some of those heartaches we did like the Ohio game, remember that game when he played so poorly," he said. "The fact that we've got Mark Dunn here for four weeks is a real positive."

Even through his struggles learning the offense, Dunn has already shown the talent he displayed at Ricks. The time to prove that talent at K-State, though, is

"Athletically he's a very good athlete. Whether he can get in there and make plays, I don't know. We're going to find out, like on Saturday," Hudson said. "In practice, we can always stand behind him in the huddle, but now he's out in the field by himself. There's nobody there. Now how's he going to play, how's he going to react? If he does well, then that answers the question.'

Is it possible to answer that question too well, though? Roberson would certainly answer yes. In last year's spring game, he broke off a 73-yard touchdown run on the opening play and then began to believe his own hype. As a result, Roberson plans on not repeating the incident this year.

"If it happens this time, I'm just going to trip and fall or do something," he said. "I think that day brought a lot of hype towards me.'

If Dunn copied the performance, on the other hand. Hudson would be perfectly happy.

"I think it would help him because then he would feel like he's learning the offense," he said. "I'd love to see that."

Spring game offers game-like atmosphere for players, fans

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

All the hype surrounding spring football practice might thrill the fan, but it most likely is lost on the athlete — especially after the wear and tear of drills has begun to take its toll.

As a result, the spring game represents not only a chance to play before a crowd but an end to practice, head coach Bill Snyder said.

"Players recognize when the end comes. They see it, it's in sight, and that's always a concern for you because you're trying to get something out of every day," Snyder said. "I don't think that you get as much out of the last 50 percent of your spring drills as you do out of the first 50 percent.

"The one thing that does maybe stretch it a little bit is the fact that we practice on alternate days, so consequently it does stretch it out over a month's period of time."

Possibly because of that anticipation of the end, the Cat squad has leveled off in its improvement, which is accentuated by the high quality of the winter workouts.

"I think our out-of-season program was probably as good as any that we have had. I think our spring has probably been a somewhat average spring," Snyder said. "I don't think that I could say the same thing about our spring practice up to this point in time that I could about our out-of-season. That doesn't make our spring practice bad I'm just saying that I thought we really got out of the gate well in the out-of-season, and our spring practice has been kind of as

expecte

"I don't think we've fallen off. I think our practice has plateaued in the last period of time."

That stagnation, though, ceases when the actual spring game arrives. Unlike practice, when players face the same players drill after drill, day after day, the spring game offers a game-like atmosphere where the points do count.

"We're in front of fans now. The atmosphere's going to be a lot different — we can hit the quarter-back." sophomore linebacker Josh Buhl said. "We get to see what really goes on there-it's more of a contact thing. They can cut and we get to hit low. I don't think it's just another scrimmage.

"The offense can really score.
When they score, it's seven points on the board, and that's what our defense doesn't want to let happen.
It's a game for us."

The rivalry between offense and defense certainly is heightened during the game. While the goal is team improvement, individual and squad pride also are on the line.

"We just let them know we put in as much work as y'all, did during the winter, so we've got to show y'all and they're going to try and do the same for us," sophomore quarterback Ell Roberson said. "It's more of a friendly competition between us as players.

"We talk all the time. I'll go at JB (Josh Buhl), and he's like. 'Don't try any of that quarterback running game at me because I'm waiting on you. I'm not dropping back. I'm waiting on you.' We go at it a whole lot. It's going to be real fun just to get out there and let everything go."

In the midst of such competition, though, the Cat coaches expect to see the first indications of how a player will perform in the fall, offensive coordinator Ron Hudson

Hudson said he wants to see how they react in an environment where he's not standing behind them, how they react to a crowd of 10-15,000, how they react in a pressure situation. He said he wants to see if they line up properly, if they get off the ball right- things he wants in the spring game.

This year, unlike in the past, the No. 1 offense and defense won't be matched up against each other. Instead, the No. 1 offense will face the No. 2, three and four defense and vice versa. The purpose of the change is to create specific matchups, especially on the line of scrimmage.

"It probably relates to offensive and defensive linemen as much as anything — whether an individual can compete with whatever the best "Most definitely, I hope he

Community-college transfer looks to stand out as receiver

Kansas State Collegian

He simply likes to be called

And as much as Lawrence "Taco" Wallace's unusual nickname begs for an explanation, the Wildcats' newest community-college transfer is keeping the mystique behind the team's most colorful handle in years under wraps.

"I can't say. I want to keep it a secret right now," Roberson said. "I just can't say."

Even Wallace's future roommate, Ell Roberson, hasn't been able to get the scoop this spring.

"I ask him all the time where he gets 'Taco' from, but he never tells me," Roberson said. "He says it's confidential, so I leave it at that, but I'll catch him on a good day and he'll tell me.'

This fall, Wallace, a 6-foot-1inch junior, hopes to direct the attention from his third-grade moniker to his statistics.

"I came here to be No. 1," he said. "This is the best place to do that. The pressure doesn't really get to me because I block it out."

Wallace has faced plenty of pressure before. As a standout receiver during his days at Mount San Antonio Community College, Wallace learned to live up to others' expectations.

"At juco, my coach blew me up, and I had to live up to the hype, and I did. I was nervous my first game, but after that, everything was like it was supposed to be."

The spotlight could shine on

Wallace again this season, too, if he manages to work his way onto a depleted receiver depth chart swarming with young talent.

The departure of receivers Quincy Morgan and Martez Wesley last season has left a void behind seniors Aaron Lockett and Brandon Clark this spring, upping the ante for the players in waiting.

"It's going to take us until the fall to develop the kind of depth that we need at wide receiver," head coach Bill Snyder said. "Aaron has had a fine spring and Brandon Clark has done some good things as well, but we need to continue to develop some of our youngsters at that position."

A lot of that development process will center around the receivers' ability to learn the system quickly, offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said.

"Every kid that comes in here has so much to learn that it takes away from their effectiveness to make great plays, at first, because they're still just learning," Hudson

"Once they learn it, though, I think the natural instincts and characteristics of the player come out in them and they do fine."

Still, the team is hoping Wallace emerges sooner, rather than later.

"Hopefully, the new guys can step up and make some good plays this year," Roberson said.

"They're young, but once they get some playing time and get a feel for the game, they'll come around and be a great help for our offense."

Williams prepares to follow lead of previous Cat defensive ends

By DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

Defensive ends coach Bob Fello was bombarded with questions a year ago.

His top dawg, third-team AP All-American Darren Howard (1996-99), had graduated, leaving his talent and K-State's career record 29.5 sacks behind.

And the questions ensued.

"I know people were asking me last spring, 'Can Chris take over for Darren?" Fello said. "I didn't have the concern because if you know Chris Johnson, you know he's going to do everything it takes. It's just his nature."

So when Johnson finished his senior campaign in 2000, boasting a team-leading 11 sacks - tying Howard and Dirk Ochs for the school single-season record -Fello found himself in an all too familiar situation

Only this time, he has more than Johnson to replace.

Monty Beisel, the Cats' leading tackler last year with 102 stops not to mention 10.5 sacks - graduated as well, leaving Fello in need of a new pair of ends this fall.

But not to worry - Fello said he has half of that duo squared away this spring in 6-foot-4, 255pound Melvin Williams.

The junior has the right demeanor, Fello said, and like Johnson before him, he'll do what it takes to fulfill his role.

"With Melvin, I feel the same way," he said. "Melvin is a guy that's very dedicated to this football team and wants to make an impact.

And as long as he improves his consistency, Williams will follow Johnson's lead, defensive coordinator Phil Bennett said.

"Last year, I think I made the statement that I was concerned about Chris Johnson being able to be an every down player in every situation," he said. "But there was a point in the season last year that Chris Johnson was just on automatic, and I see that happening with Melvin. He's very comfortable in that position."

So comfortable, Williams said, he doesn't even feel the pressure of trying to fill the sizable void left by his predecessors.

"I wouldn't say pressure - it's just a challenge," Williams said. The task is apparent, and there's no need for Bennett to sit the St. Louis native down each practice to talk about role playing next season.

"He doesn't have to repeat it every day," Williams said. "He told me once, and it's going to be a challenge for me to go out and work hard every day - do the things I've got to do to make him feel comfortable in playing me."

But looking at the past few years, the defensive end position has conjured ample shoes to fill -Big 12 Defensive Player of the Week five times in the past two years, bowl game Defensive MVP honors the last two years, allconference players, career sack records, single game sack records and team tackles leaders.

The Cat defensive ends have set the standard, Fello said.

"There's a tradition there. Now, what happens with that tradition?" he said. "Who steps up and does something with it, or do we let it fall by the wayside and say, 'Well, we're not experienced."

Apparently, Williams is taking the first option. After tallying 4.5 sacks in 12 games last season, he has his sights set on the singleseason sack record this fall - set by Nyle Wiren (11.5) in 1996.

"And it should be - I would hope that is his goal," Fello said. "I would hope it's every kid's goal that goes out there - 'Can I break that record?"

This spring, Williams looks to be taking charge at right end through both his actions and

"They see him making plays. If you're making plays and yelling at other people to make plays too, it helps," Fello said. "If you're getting your ass knocked off the ball and yelling at other people to make plays, they don't listen too much - can't hear you as you're getting knocked down.'

But senior linebacker Ben Leber said he's seen that kind of potential in Williams all along.

We always knew that if he got a chance to play last year, if Monty went down or Chris went down, that he could step in and we wouldn't miss a beat," Leber said. "I don't worry about Melvin at all."

Wildcats work to replenish starting lineup at defensive line

By DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

Out with the old; in with the new. That's the basic order of procedure for K-State's defensive coaches this spring, as the Cats lose three of four starting-down linemen to graduation.

But rebuilding a lineup is nothing new to this staff, defensive ends coach Bob Fello said.

"Old guys teach young guys. Those young guys become old guys, and they teach the new young guys. And that thing kind of propagates itself within the system." Fello said. "That's what's happened over the years during Coach Snyder's tenure here. And it's kind of a nice deal."

Then again, though — it's not just any three linemen to replace next

Ends Monty Beisel and Chris Johnson, who combined for 175 tackles and 21.5 sacks last season, will be gone. Big 300-pound tackle Mario Fatafehi, ranked third on the team with 80 tackles and 8.5 sacks in 2000, has said goodbye to his days in a Wildcat uniform.

Not to mention the experience of Cliff Holloman, who started the first two games last season for the purple.

These graduates now hand down the front-four responsibilities to their successors — faces that might have seen significant time on the field in the past but primarily in a reserve

"It's a concern, but as I've said before, I think we've got some guys that can do it," defensive coordinator Phil Bennett said. "I compare a little bit to my first year here in '98, when we said we had to have Cliff and Mario come in and be the guys they

Now, Bennett said, it's time to see who the guys will be for next season. And it all begins in the spring.

At defensive tackle, the frontrunners are seniors Eric Everley, DeVane Robinson and Jerry Togiai, as well as sophomore Justin Montgomery.

Robinson had the most on-field experience for K-State last season, starting beside Fatafehi in the Cats' final 11 games. Togiai also came on late, playing 50 percent of the snaps in the last four games of the year, Bennett said.

Nonetheless, it's Everley, a twoyear letterman, and 275-pound Montgomery who are expected to play with the No. 1 defense in Saturday's spring game, while Robinson is the third man in the rotation.

"We've given an awful lot of opportunities to Eric Everley," Snyder said. "If think he has made some strides. I think he and Justin Montgomery have proven to us at this point in time that they are both on the verge of being able to help us.

"Progress obviously needs to be made, but it's a work in progress." Bennett is especially impressed with Everley, who has trimmed 19 pounds off his weight — down to 300 — and at 6 feet 5 inches, can still run the 40-yard dash in 5.0 seconds or

"Eric Everley is having a good spring," Bennett said. "I have a feeling it's going to be his turn, and he's worked like it is.

"Of course, we need transfers like Corey White and (Allen) 'Tank' Reese to come in and be good in the mix, and I think they will."

Conversely, the shakedown at the end position might be a bit more hazy.

"The big question is, 'what about our defensive ends?' Snyder said. "I think Melvin Williams has had a relatively good spring. He has proven to me that he has the capacity to be a quality defensive end, but he still has some progress that needs to be made.

"I think we still have some uncertainties about the other side at this point in time."

Fello agreed. In fact, as of Tuesday, he still hadn't made a decision on who will join Williams as a starter in Saturday's spring game.

The competition lies between redshirt freshman Alax Carrier and sophomores Andrew Shull and Thomas Houchin.

"We've been working those three guys over there, and all of them are making improvement," Fello said. "As you would expect with young players, there's up days and down days. Hopefully, by the end of spring, those up days will outweigh the down days and it'll be a continued up.

"I wish I could look in there and say, 'This guy's going to do it.' Because every day that you see something on a guy and say, 'OK, he's starting to make his move,' and then he slips off, or something comes along and another guy makes a move."

At any rate, though, it all goes back to players learning from their predecessors — and applying it to the field,

"As a whole, we've all played and I know we've played with those guys and the guys that left before them — so for the majority of us, it's not a whole lot of pressure," he said: "We just know we've got to keep the level of play the same, but I think as a whole I think we're doing all right at that."

Besides, when the front four are playing well, it makes things much easier on the linebacking corps, senior Ben Leber said. Yet, the void to fill from last season's stellar group is no meager task.

"It was a huge asset to have those guys down there last year, and it's something we're working on," Leber said. "But I don't think it's going to be hard to replace guys like that. A lot of it's the schemes, and a lot of it's just playing hard.

"I'm not saying the talent and what they bring to the table, though — that can't be replaced."

Scobey, Cartwright look to lead backfield

By DAN SMITH Kansas State Collegian

Sophomore quarterback Ell Roberson put it best Tuesday afternoon in the Big Eight Room of the Vanier Football Complex.

"Our backfield is going to be stacked with a lot of talent this year," he said.

That might be an understatement.

K-State's 2001 backfield could be one of the most intimidating units in school history, thanks to the return of third team All-Big 12 rusher Josh Scobey and 5-foot-8, 252-pound fullback, Rock Cartwright.

"It's a strong ingredient in this team." Scobey said. "For this team to be successful, we're going to need all the cylinders to be clicking this year, and right now, the backfield is trying to be that main ingredient and nucleus of this team."

Most fans are expecting big years out of Scobey and Cartwright, but few were expecting the emergence of sophomore tailback Danny Morris as another solid piece of the puzzle.

"He's stepped it up a notch. Not to say he hasn't always had it, but he came in this spring and has been a quality backup," Scobey said.

Hard work and an improved knowledge of the Cats' offensive package could translate into some carries for the unproven back, backfield coach Michael Smith said,

"Right now, out of all of the guys that are going right now, I'd have to say that Danny Morris is having the best spring. He's done some real fine things in our scrimmage work and has solidified himself as the No. 2 right now.

"Dariny is playing extremely well right now, and that's good because he's pushing Josh, It keeps him out of that comfort zone, and you always want to keep your No. 1 on his toes."

Even head coach Bill Snyder has taken notice of Scobey's 5-foot-11-inch, 200-pound understudy.

"I'm pleased with our backfield arrangement right now," he said. "Danny Morris has been a very, very efficient running back for us this spring. I'm pleased with what he has done."

But don't expect Morris to be taking over the leading role in Snyder's backfield any time soon, Scobey said.

"In 2000, I had to show people what I was all about. It was a new place for me, but now I'm at home," he said. "I feel like I accomplished a lot and built a building base, and now I'm going to continue to stack my bricks and build a great home and leave a great path behind."

A new part of Scobey's game this year is his ability to lead the team. With the leadership of quarterback Jonathan Beasley gone, Scobey has taken it upon himself to make sure there is no dropoff in offensive intensity this year.

"I have to be a leader for this team, not only mentally, but vocally," he said. "I have to show these guys that when it's time to get down and get dirty, it's time to get down and get dirty. Sometimes you have to step up and do that. You have to be that quality leader."

Smith said he thinks Scobey should adapt to his role as the team's strength quite nicely because of his personality and comfort with the system.

"I think Josh's work ethic is what attracts people to him as being a leader. That, and of course, what he did on the field last year and just his personality, make him that."

To Smith, that means respect from Wildcat opponents as well.

"Just on paper, with Rock and Josh coming back as proven starters and the guys we have backing them up. I would think that people would look at us as the most stable part of this team," he said.

"With that comes a lot of pressure for us to do well, which we gladly accept. I think my kids are going to be up to the challenge. I'm definitely looking forward to next year. I'm expecting really big things out of that group."

Saturday with Rounds 1-3 on ESPN and ESPN2, with Rounds 4-7 to follow starting at 10 a.m. Sunday.

K-State could have as many as 13 former players hear their names called out of the possible 246 total draft selections.

They include: Jonathan Beasley, Quincy Morgan, Shad Meier, David Allen and Randall Cummins on offense; Jarrod Cooper, Mario Patafehi, Dyshod Carter, Jerametrius Butler, Monty Beisel, Cliff Holloman and Chris Johnson on defense; and kicker Jamie Rheem on special teams.

The highest projected pick for the Cats, according to several sports analysts, looks to be Morgan, who is slated to be a late first-round or early second-round selection.

Players like Beasley, though, aren't feeling as much anxiety, as the former Cat QB said he figures to be picked up as either a late-round selection or as a free-agent.

In fact, Beasley's not even uptight about the draft this weekend.

"Nah," he said. "There's nothing to be uptight about. It's one of those waiting games. All you can do it sit and wait, and that's one I'm doing."

But he'll definitely be watching, nonetheless.

"I'm just going to go home, sit in front of the TV, and just flip through the stations," Beasley said. "I might have to pull another TV out so I can always keep one on the draft and the other to watch whatever's on normal television."

On Sunday, at least. Beasley said it would be quite a shock if he was drafted in one of Saturday's top three rounds.

"Saturday, I'm going to be more than likely at the pool or something, because unless a stroke of something happens that I get drafted on that day ... I mean, that would be great but I'm not planning on it," Beasley said. "So I can go to the mall or something, have fun on Saturday, but on Sunday I'll probably be glued to the set."

As far as what team Beasley could end up with, though, he said it's no big issue to him.

"It doesn't matter. I just want to play. If I can leave Arizona to come to the great city of Manhattan, Kan., I can go anywhere," he said.

"I just want to be given the opportunity just like any other person. I think once I get in there and they see that I work hard and I can be a quick study, it'll help me in the long run."

Nevertheless, Beasley said he'll be looking forward to seeing several of his teammates drafted this weekend. He thinks Morgan, Cooper, Fatafehi — and maybe Meier and Rheem — could all find themselves going in the first three rounds.

"I'm happy for them," Beasley said. "They've worked just as hard as I have the last four or five years to get to where we are now. And it's starting to pay off."

Defensive coordinator Phil Bennett offered a few predictions for several of his former defensive players as well. He projects both Butler and Carter to go in the late rounds, although he admits that he wished Butler didn't go pro early after his junior season.

"Jerametrius, as I told him, I think he came out too early — of course I'm prejudiced on that, But I think that he's a guy that for the right team — that does a lot of man-to-man will make somebody a very good football player.

"He just has a dream, and we hope here that that dream gets fulfilled because I think he deserves it."

But perhaps Bennett's highest draft animations were directed toward 270-pound defensive end Monty Beisel. "I saw that Kyle Vanden Bosch from Nebraska was rated high, and I'm not saying this just because I'm at Kansas State, but I'll take Monty Beisel every day of the week.

"I just think Monty has an upside that's going to be good for pro

Earth Day volunteers clean up Manhattan

Manhattan residents hit streets Saturday to clean downtown area.

Broom-carrying volunteers scathed the streets and alley from Poyntz Avenue to Leavenworth Street to Houston Street for the second-annual Manhattan Main Street Earth Day clean-up Saturday.

By 7 a.m., the storms had cleared and a crew of eight workers gathered at the former site of Rad-A-Tat Tattoo on Poyntz Avenue to grab their gloves, trash bags and a quick cup of coffee before breaking out to clean up the downtown area. The workers, Manhattan Main Street Committee members, consisted of downtown business owners, employees and Executive Director Michele Jones.

Although it was small in numbers, the group proved that even a few can make a difference. They collected everything from cigarette butts to pop cans and swept the stoops of every business from Fifth Street to Manhattan Town

"This is our area of work, our homes. We all want to keep this place alive. This is what Main Street is all about because it's clean, and it looks nice," said Ralph Diaz, co-owner of the Gaia Salon. "We want people to realize that we do care, and we want others to be more aware of their surroundings when they're downtown."

Salon owners Diaz and Lisa Costlow, along with their staff, started the Earth Day cleanup on Poyntz Avenue last year in conjunction with the Aveda Concepts Salon Company, a line of completely organic products.

"I wanted to start the Earth Day clean up after working with Aveda and witnessing their strong stance on environmental issues," he said.

K-State student and Gaia Salon employee Erin Lollar said Aveda and the Earth Day cleanup were about giving back to the community through environmental action.

"Aveda is global, but through them and this business, we can get involved and bring environmental awareness to Manhattan," Lollar said. "We can try to ensure that we may have a better place to live in years to come.'

Jones and the committee took over the event in hopes that more of the committee's 260 business members would participate.

"Our goal is to get more people involved and to give businesses the opportunity to take part. We had great ideas for this year, and next year we plan to start promotions earlier to help make these ideas a reality," Jones said.

Jones said students should take advantage of the downtown Earth Day cleanup.

WALKING FOR LIFE

People trek across campus to raise funds for March of Dimes aturday morning greeted more than the typical number of campus walkers. Individuals and representatives of local businesses gathered to walk - some pushing strollers, some pulling wagons, some leading dogs — to raise money for March of Dimes in Walk America 2001.

The walkers gathered between 8:30 and 9:30 a.m. at Memorial Stadium to begin registration and stretching their arms and legs. At 9:30, they started their four-mile walk through campus.

All of the participants collected pledges in advance with individual incentives of T-shirts, sweatshirts, gift certificates and a drawing for airline tickets to raise additional money.

employee and a team captain, helped with Walk America for his 17th year. He said he was expecting about 350 walkers and expected to raise about $30,000 which will be used in the Manhattan vicinity

"The nice thing about this is that the funding stays in this area," he said. "I think it's good that it stays locally." Brown said he personally hass been affected by the March of Dimes. "Our son was born prematurely and benefited from the treatments. Now, he's 7 years old and doing great," he said. "It adds a lot of extra meaning." The March of Dimes is a non-profit organization that was established in 1938 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to save America's children from polio. The walks began in 1970, said Brenda Reis, special events coordinator, and they are the biggest fund-raisers for the organization. "The March of Dimes funds Mike Brown, a Kansas Farm Bureau research to provide programs and education and new developments to give every child the healthiest start possible in life," Reis said. "The 2000 and above generation has the best chance at that healthlest start."

Brown said the walk in Manhattan had taken place at other locations in the past, but the K-State campus, which has been the site of the walk for the past seven or eight years, was a much better area.

"It's such a safe place to walk with adequate crossings," he said. "We get to see the pretty spring flowers and everything.

When the walkers returned from their four-mile trek they ate pancakes donated by Dillons, the Kiwanas Club and Quaker Oats - Cap'n Crunch even made an appearance.

Several groups on campus also participated in the walk, including students from Mortar Board, Alpha Tau Omega and Lafene Health Center, Brown said.

"It's nice to get these students involved," he said.

Hoisington takes stock after tornado

By OLENA NIKOLAYENKO Kansas State Collegian

The news about a tornado in Hoisington reached several K-State students from this small town in central Kansas on Saturday night.

"I just wanted to find out whether my parents and my relatives are safe," said Michael Steinert, senior in milling science and management. "It was kind of shocking."

Steinert's parents came back to the town when the tornado died away. But it left its mark upon the people of community; the Steinerts found their house his by the tornado.

'Most of the house is gone," Steinert said. "The whole street was torn up.

Steinert's parents are staying at his grandparents' house. Families who are lucky enough to have their houses undamaged are host to those who lost the roof under their head.

"It is a pretty small community;" Sarah Nettleingham, graduate student in English, said. "Everybody knows everybody. And people are opening their houses to others."

Triage centers were set up at City Hall downtown and at a Catholic church.

Katrina Radenberg, senior in finance and graduate of Hoisington High School, heard that her alma mater was damaged. The windows were broken our. "There are a lot of houses being damaged,"

K-State baseball capitalizes on Bruin errors, sweeps UCLA in 3-game weekend series

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

Coming into the weekend's series against the 2000 Pac 10 champion UCLA Bruins, K-State head baseball coach Mike Clark said he had confidence in his team to come out and play hard against the Bruins.

As it turns out, he was expecting a whole

"Believe it or not, we all believed we were going to do this," Clark said after an 11-7 win Sunday completed a three-game sweep of the Bruins at Frank Myers Field.

"When we showed up to pull the tarp at nine o' clock this morning, it was 'Whatever it takes,' and 'We're going to win this inning.' We expected this to happen, and it's kind of neat to see that kind of confidence with the guys," he said Sunday.

By the time the first pitch was thrown in game three of the series Sunday, the Cats (2021, 6-15) already had taken the first two games, capitalizing on eight Bruin (25-16, 6-6) errors to score 21 runs during the stretch.

Game one was a battle, but K-State's offense after two Bruin mistakes in the seventh inning ensured the Cat win. Senior Josh Cavender followed J.D. Loudabarger's game-winning hit with a two-run double to right centerfield to push the lead to 8-5. It would stick, giving K-State a win in its first meeting against the Bruins.

"It's real big - it puts some doubt in their eyes," Loudabarger said following Friday's win. "They know for now that they can't just come out and put their jocks on the field and expect to beat us. Gosh, playing well and winning is a wonderful feeling. We have a lot of confidence right now, and it's going to take something big to bring it down. I just hope it keeps going."

A healthy crowd of 2,947 fans were on hand Saturday afternoon to see the momentum carry over in another game that involved plenty of Bruin mistakes and plenty of Wildcat runs.

"We did a good job of making them pay for their mistakes," senior catcher Cavender said. "We saw quality pitching, and we had a lot of quality at-bats and key hits in key situations."

Despite being outhit for the second consecutive day, K-State pulled out a 13-12 win in the bottom of the ninth inning when,

Broadcasters discuss Internet, copyright laws

LAS VEGAS - Radio stations have learned to embrace the Internet as an ally capable of carrying their programming all over the world.

But cyberspace is not without its potholes. Major broadcasters, who gathered in Las Vegas this week for their annual convention, now find themselves dealing with thorny copyright and performance issues as they bring their content online.

Some matters have proved to be such a headache that many broadcast companies recently stopped sending their radio signals over the Web - also known as streaming - until they sort it out. Clear Channel Communications, for example, took down nearly all of its 318 stations that had been on the Internet.

"We want to get back online as quickly as is feasible because our customers want us online," said Kevin Mayer, chairman and chief executive officer of Clear Channel Internet Group. "I think we've proven that an audience exists."

One dispute has put radio stations in between advertising agencies and the trade groups that represent actors and singers used in commercials.

The American Federation of Television and Radio Artists and other associations have a provision in their contract requiring that ad agencies pay an additional amount to performers if radio commercials are also broadcast on the Internet.

To avoid paying the fees, ad agencies ordered radio stations to delete the commercials when they stream their content on the Web.

Now broadcasters are looking for ways that will enable them to remove ads designed for radio and substitute them with Internet-only commercials. Once that is done, companies such as Emmis Communications Corp., which dropped nearly all of its 13 streaming stations, say they hope to return their broadcasts to the Internet.

A second issue involves royalty payments. Last year, the Copyright Office ruled that stations airing their radio broadcasts on the Web must pay fees to the recording industry. The office is reviewing recommendations about compen-

Environmental policies causing liberal concern

WASHINGTON, D.C. - On Earth Day, Bush Cabinet members defended the president's environmental policies as a measured approach that balances the need for clean air and water with demands for energy and other natural resources.

'We have made a number of decisions that are very proenvironment, but unfortunately they get overlooked when there's something that people can challenge," Christie Whitman, Environmental Protection Administration chief, said Sunday.

"I would hope that we look at the total picture. Are we making the air cleaner, the water purer, are we better protecting the land?" she said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Environmental groups and some Democrats criticize Bush for rescinding several Clinton administration initiatives. They also say Bush is pushing for oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge at the expense of the environment.

Sen. Joseph Lieberman. Democratic nominee for vice president in 2000, said the administration has been influenced by right-wing interests that would have him drill for oil on pristine lands and allow too much arsenic

When you get loose about the amount of arsenic in water, which we're worried causes cancer, when you say you're going to drill in one of the most beautiful places the good Lord has given us in America, the arctic refuge, that's not sensible centrism," Lieberman, D-Conn., told CBS.

San Francisco to pay for employees' sex changes

SAN FRANCISCO - San Francisco is prepared to make history by becoming the only city to pay for employees' sex changes - a move some say is long overdue in ending discriminatory practices against transsexuals.

"It really is a civil-rights issue," said Marcus Arana, a transgender San Francisco Human Rights Commission discrimination investigator. "We have an insurance issued that will pay for a hysterectomy in Mary but not in Marcus, and will pay for hormone therapy in Mary but not in Marcus.

After a five-year fight in the city's Health Service System, the genderswitching benefits earned approval last week from a city committee and will go before the full Board of Supervisors on Monday.

San Francisco would be the only governmental body in the nation to make sex-change benefits available. The state of Minnesota offered such benefits, but the program was phased out in 1998. The issue was discussed in Oregon, but a commission decided against it in 1999.

Special Olympic athletes compete

By ALYSON RALETZ
Kansas State Collegian

Waiting for the 25-meter freestyle race to start, he pointed to the ceiling of the Natatorium. The whistle blew, and he glided through the water. The crowd roared just as loudly when he finished first as it did when the last athlete made it to the edge of the pool.

Eric Senne, a 27-year-old Special Olympics athlete from Topeka, was one of 72 swimmers to compete in the Kansas northeast area aquatics and powerlifting competition on Saturday. There were nine powerlifters.

Senne's grandfather died earlier this March, Rita Kennedy, Senne's coach, said.

"After the race, he told me he told his grandfather he was going to win the race for him." Kennedy said. "He said his grandfather told him, 'Good luck."

Senne has participated in Special Olympics since he was 8. He has participated in events such as swimming, track and field, powerlifting and has a trophy for softball.

"I was talking to my grandpa," Senne, who has Down Syndrome, said.

He practices once a week every spring in Topeka with the Topeka Shawnee Special Olympics team.

Kennedy said he likes going to practice for the social aspect, but he does not like the repetition.

"I don't like to run," Senne said.
"But it keeps me in shape, and it keeps me skinny, so I run."

Senne's mother, Doris Senne, said she is glad he is involved because it has been great for him.

Education, tax cuts top Congress' agenda

By JIM ABRAMS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A wellrested Congress returns to work on school accountability and tax cuts, issues at heart of the Bush administration's agenda.

By midweek, the Senate is to take up an education bill in line with the president's plan to improve the performance of both public schools they attend.

House and Senate negotiators also sit down this week to grapple with differences in their approach to the budget for the fiscal year which begins Oct. 1.

the nation's students and the

The House voted for a budget that endorsed Bush's 10-year, $1.6 trillion tax cut. The Senate, in its final act before the two-week Easter break, approved a package that included more spending than the president wants and a $1.2 trillion tax break.

A vote on a compromise could come by the end of the week.

In what is expected to be a busy five weeks before Memorial Day, Republican leaders hope to send a tax cut package to the president and come up with a long-term energy plan.

The Senate is likely to vote on legislation to raise the minimum wage while giving small businesses some tax relief. Democrats also are pressing on such issues as campaign finance legislation, prescription drug benefits for seniors and patient rights for those in HMO programs.

These activities follow the fairly cautious approach taken so far by Republican leaders who finally have a soul mate in the White House but also must deal with a Democratic force of nearly equal strength.

Congress this year has passed two critical bills. One makes it tougher to declare bankruptcy. The other overturns Clinton administration ergonomic rules aimed at reducing workplace injuries.

The House has passed the main parts of the Bush tax plan while the Senate, in a victory for Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., approved limits on campaign contributions.

House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said Congress in the first 75 days of the Bush administration has been less sensational but more productive than the Clinton administration in its opening days.

Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, head of the House Democratic Caucus, said Republicans were determined to taken an unrealistic approach, charging ahead with tax cuts before they know how much the country needs for other priorities, and before dealing with urgent matters such as prescription drug benefits.

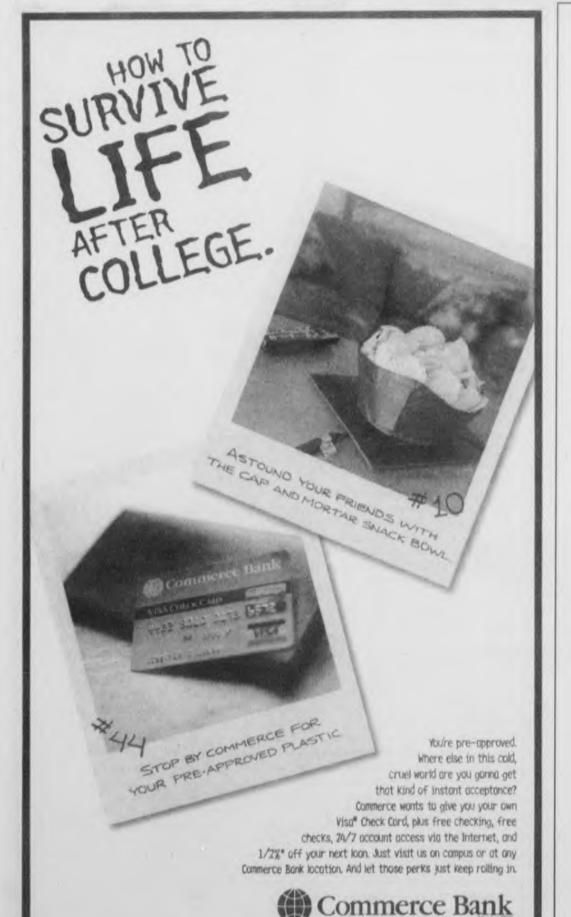

After weeks of negotiations with Democrats, Senate Republicans hope to pass an education bill that largely will reflect Bush's goals of keeping schools more accountable, requiring annual testing to measure student performance and providing other options to students attending failing schools.

A tentative compromise was reached before the recess on the contentious issue of vouchers, under which students at substandard schools could get funds for after school tutoring or to transfer, to another public school but would not, as proposed by Bush, allow public funds to be used for private, school tuition.

But the opening of debate on the bill was put off until at least Wednesday because of remaining differences over funds. Democrats say the Bush budget proposal, while increasing education spending, does not go far enough to meet the costs of hiring more teachers and building or repairing schools.

during the usual class time, and the speakers have little or no access to the students.

Granted, money probably is an issue. It's easy to note that the speakers have become more regional and not nearly as recognizable for their academic achievements. Yet academics are what keep this university going, for the most part. Students need to have more of a say in who is chosen to speak.

The quality of speakers has decreased recently, and that is unfair to everyone on campus.

IMMEDIATE ACTION

Activism, awareness need to grow to keep Earth inhabitable

Perhaps it's reductive to call the civil rights movement of the 1960s a nobrainer. After all, there was, as unfathomable as it might seem now, opposition to desegregated public toilets and African-Americans geiting registered to vote. There also was a notable body count of civic soldiers who died in the struggle, so it wasn't void of danger.

Still, it's difficult not to resent baby boomers who wax nostalgic of their glory days of activism against such uncomplicated evil. It's even more difficult when our world is still generally screwed up, only further along on its progressive continuum of screwedupness. Supporting the civil rights movement now courageous stand.

So when baby seems about as brave as appearing on the Men Against Rape Society poster. Men against rape? Gee, what a

The only difference is that this time it won't be a social one. Instead, it is nature herself who will be front and center.

The need for environmental activism now is as burgeoning and straight forward as was the need for a Martin Luther King Jr. in the 1950s. Unfortunately, our collective sensory perception is less acute than it used to be. This means that in addition to nothing tasting, smelling or feeling as good as it used to, we're also less aware of earthly phenomenon.

Without dragging this out, let's just say there is little time left with which to make/keep the earth habitable. Make no mistake; saving the planet never was the issue. It's bigger and smarter than we are, and it was here first. It will continue to be here after we're gone, no matter how messy our exit might be. The real concern here is the longevity of our own race.

Yes, it comes from the same "What the hell are they thinking" file as the desegregation struggle and the abolition of gruesome child labor. It's another scenario that is so damn obvious that only someone in a coma might not notice what is happening and why it needs to be fixed immediately. But herein lies the problem. During a long commercial break, our consciousness lapsed into a coma, remote control still in hand. Now, a bunch of pained relatives sit at our bedside wondering if we'll ever wake up, or if they should just sign the papers

> So thank goodness for the few groups on our campus who are making attempts to raise even the slightest awareness. Take for instance Students for Environmental Action, which sponsored Earth Day in the Park this last weekend. Although environmentalists celebrating 4/20 on Friday were given very little time to recuperate, they still managed to rally for SEA's first attempt at an organized Earthfest.

Or how about the almost-never-publicized KSU Solar Car Racing Team? Ever heard of them? If not, you will soon. And if not then, you'll eventually be buying their cars. This fearless group of engineering and business students have designed, constructed and raced their solar powered cars, most namely the Apollo, all over the country, picking up respect and accolades along the way. In their next national race, they will be trekking out on old

U.S. Route 66, fueled only by the sun and their own ingenuity. Even more remote is K-State Theatre, now producing Tom Stoppard's play "Arcadia," which explains the role of humans trying to decode the mysteries of nature better than any textbook can. A very funny, very sexy, very beautiful play, "Arcadia" manages to tackle a hundred subjects at once, not the least of which is the silliness of humans trying to preserve themselves and control land when the land is really controlling and preserving them.

But all these endeavors ultimately are just a drop in the ocean. Without environmental legislation and responsibility on behalf of developers and corporations, we've got a one-way ticket to hell in a handbasket.

It is as plain as day, as obvious as a segregated lunch counter or a factory that uses small children to crawl into large machinery to fix broken parts. This is a genuine no-brainer.

Human rights in Asia is a complicated issue, as is female circumcision in Africa. Gun violence in schools and its relationship to the media is a complex dilemma and so is the dumbing down of our national education system. All of these topics can be argued from countless perspectives and are as diverse in spectrum as the day is long.

The environment, on the other hand, is relatively simple: We take immediate action or we see the demise of our existence very shortly. Those who see this scientifically reinforced perspective as alarmist probably find alarms to be irritating and inconvenient. Too bad.

We are not a generation without important battles to fight. Hell, we aren't even without clear cut lines of demarcation. In a time where everyone laments postmodernism but no one knows what it means, and in a country that is increasingly fragmented but is more than a sum of its fragments, one thing actually IS clear (which is one thing more than anyone acknowledges); time is

"It is only with the heart that one can see rightly. What is essential is invisible to the eye. Men have forgotten this truth." - Antoine de Saint Exupery

What is the exact social chemistry that makes up Manhattan? Is it the residents, students or faculty? For eight students, our once-held perceptions of the formula for this place has been erased and a new equation has been written. We each picked a distinct cultural niche that was unknown to us and the mainstream. We studied through participant observation and interacted with our groups all semester. Unbeknown to each of us, when we began our studies we began a journey of learning about these generally unknown and misunderstood subcultures. Through our studies, our worlds changed. Throughout the semester we spent at least one day a week observing these subcultures and numerous hours interviewing people, so at the end we could write an ethnography about our experiences. Each of us stepped over the imagined lines of cultural boundaries and found warm faces and welcome arms. Reaching the end of our journeys, we realized this project, was more than an ethnography. It was a way of fine-tuning our sight and using our hearts and minds to guide us into beginning the process of explaining the misunderstood to the misunderstood.

Each day this week one column will run about these subcultures we have spent the semester studying. As a class, we hope your eyes will become as wide as ours have, and that you will learn a little bit more about this place we call home.

I find myself in Britannia, a shark tooth-shaped island covered with lush green forests, yellow deserts and frozen landscapes. In this reality I have 360-degree vision presented to me in an isometric overhead perspective. I have walked along a dirt path that connects village to village, all detailed in a rural medievalness. To walk from one side of this island to the other would take more than three hours.

I click the window of my computer screen back to my paper and return as the K-State student, bound to graduate in May. For this paper I have been performing as an anthropologist, conducting participant observation within the Ultima Online gaming world — both the real and virtual. This Persistent State World (PSW), or Virtual World, is a multi-player, realtime, role-playing game. Here, players create and live out a virtual life. They of columns about subcultures studied create an identity, jobs, and talents within a world holding hundreds of other avatars. They communicate, fight, trade, kill and co-habitat with each other simultaneously.

I am navigated in this reality as MAX, a self-created virtual self, over whom I have ultimate control. In this virtual world I am a collection of tiny pixels that when seen from a home computer screen fabricate into a middle age man, donning an orange shirt, brown pants and a long gray beard. I click and drag the mouse and MAX moves.

The Internet is the site of hundreds of Ultima Online shards, or individual gaming communities, A local Manhattan shard, available free through Flinthills Internet, hosts Ultima Online. For the past seven years the shard has grown to a population of more than 700.

On the east side of Briton is a vast lake well stocked with virtual fish. A virtual lake in a virtual world doesn't reflect the trees, people and buildings surrounding its smooth, flat surface. Instead, this Ultima Online lake mirrors social gathering practices of the Midwestern gamers.

Ultima Online provides some players with an escape from the real world. Gamers can spend on average anywhere from three to eight hours or more a day gaming within this virtual environment.

Stories are passed around about gamers that have lost their jobs or girlfriends or that flunk out of college due to their Ultima Online addiction. The reasons to remove oneself from reality are personal.

One gamer said, "If I go out in real life and want to compete with somebody, I can, in a sport, in academics, in racing cars, you know, I can do that. Or, I just can get in the game where all I have to do is click a button, and I can compete. Clicking a button is easy. I can do that.'

While Ultima Online might be a form of escape from the stresses of the real world, it doesn't escape from the existence of real community. The Ultima Online gaming realm provides a platform for a virtual community.

Not knowing each other by their real names, but character names only, these gamers continually arrange parties outside of cyberia. These avid avatars are interested in who might be on the other side of the screen.

Beginning on the Internet and ending in a Manhattan apartment, Ultima Online is an escape that mirrors the real world, yet still maintains a community that transcends realities and stereotypes.

After a couple of seconds, a fish appears at the end of his taunt fishing line. He pulls it out of the water and swings it onto the deck. In time, other avatars make their way down to the dock, some wearing dresses, some in green skin. Their virtual-selves began discussing gaming and life-their realselves making plans to meet this weekend.

Sunset Survivor

Night-long competition raises funds for Sunset Zoo

Story by Lynn Trevino ■ Photos by Steven Dearinger

Regardless of rain or shine, contestants who participated in "Sunset Survivor" on Friday at Sunset Zoological Park battled the conditions in an attempt to give back to the Manhattan community.

"Survivor" was an all-greek philanthropy planned by the K-State's Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils. The councils, which act as the governing bodies for the fraternities and sororities on campus, organized the event to help raise money for Sunset Zoo. "The whole focus of the event was to support something in the Manhattan community," said Julie Karrer, public-relations coordinator for Panhellenic Council. "We are here to make the community better too. Lots of businesses support us, and we wanted to give something back."

Karrer said representatives from Sunset Zoo approached the councils in need of support. Due to previous relations with the greek community, the Sunset Zoo was interested in having the greek Sunset Zoo again.

Justin Springer, public-relations coordinator for Interfraternity Council, said when members of both councils began planning "Survivor" earlier in the semester, they hoped to make the event an annual one that would not only raise money for the Sunset Zoo but also help spread awareness of the zoo.

Each of the 17 houses that participated in the philanthropy sent one representative from each house to participate in a nightlong competition similar to that seen on the TV show "Survivor."

Participants were divided into two teams and competed in six team events until midnight, when the team with the lowest amount of points was eliminated.

"From 12 o'clock on it became an individual competition," Springer said. "That one team working together to beat the other team then went one-on-one."

Springer said each of the seven individual events used mental and physical challenges to eliminate one of the remaining contestants. The final two participants competed in the last event at 7:30 a.m. after competing throughout the night, regardless of thunderstorms and tornado watches.

"You felt like you really survived by the end of the night," Springer said.

After the final event was over, T.J. Meyer of Delta Tau Delta came out victorious as the survivor of the competition. The Panhellenic Council and Interfraternity council provided food, cash and prizes from corporate sponsors to participants in the night's events.

Springer said he felt the goals for the event were met, and improvements will be made to ensure "Survivor" will be a success again next year.

Officer's hearing set for Monday

By JAYMES SONG The Associated Press

HONOLULU — The skipper of the USS Greeneville has been assured his disciplinary hearing Monday will be conducted with an open mind and expects to retire with full pension and an honorable discharge, his attorney said.

Cmdr. Scott Waddle plans to travel to Japan after he retires to meet with families of the nine Japanese students and adults killed when the Greeneville collided with the school's fishing boat Feb. 9, civilian attorney Charles Gittins said.

Waddle's commanding officer,
U.S. Pacific Fleet commander
Adm. Thomas Fargo, will punish Waddle on Monday at a hearing known as an admiral's mast, rather than institute a court-martial proceeding. It will mean the end of Waddle's Navy career, although he will not face the prospect of prison.

"He will retire as commander, with full pension and with an honorable characterization of discharge, consistent with the character of his 20 years service," Gittins told The Associated Press.

Waddle has apologized and accepted full blame for the collision that sank the Ehime Maru. The collision occurred as the giant submarine was conducting a rapid resurfacing exercise in waters off Hawaii

Navy officials have acknowledged that the surfacing demonstration was done only for the benefit of 16 civilians aboard, three of whom were seated at the sub's controls at the time of the collision.

Waddle could face other disciplinary action, including letters of reprimand and fines, but the decision not to have him to face a court martial has angered many Japanese. A Japanese official said Friday that the families of those killed will not be satisfied unless Waddle faces a court martial.

On Saturday, Waddle received a copy of the report of a threemember military panel that reviewed the case. Gittins declined to describe the panel's conclusions, but Pentagon officials have said Fargo is following the officers' recommendation in not calling for courts martial of top Greeneville officers.

"No other document was provided to Scott, and we have been assured that Adm. Fargo will meet with Scott with an open mind," Gittins said.

Gittins said if punishment is imposed and there is grounds for appeal, "you can be sure we will pursue the appeal."

The session at Pacific Fleet headquarters in Pearl Harbor will be conducted under Article 15 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The proceedings will be closed to the public and news media.

Gittins said Waddle has a number of very good job offers outside the military and has not decided where he and his family will settle.

Spring game standouts look to fall season

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Immediately after the Purple squad's 44-6 trouncing of White in the annual spring football game Saturday, head coach Bill Snyder began looking toward next fall.

K-State's season opener at USC might not be until Sept. 8, but that date could arrive before Snyder believes his team is ready.

"We might need a year," he said. Actually, the prognosis might not be that bleak. While K-State certainly looked rough as a team, several individuals stood out. Offensively, the spotlight was on the quarterback contenders Marc Dunn and Ell Roberson, but it was senior wide receiver

Brandon Clark who stole the show, making seven catches for 161 yards.

However, Clark chose to focus on his mistakes.

"I'm the type of guy that likes to look at the negatives, and that's how you make yourself better. That's what's going to separate you from the other people - you work on your negatives and improve from there," Clark said. "I blocked a couple wrong - I turned the wrong way. There were a couple times I got fatigued a little bit and got jammed."

The running game, especially from the first-team Purple, also looked effective. Senior Josh Scobey led the attack with 15 carries for 95 yards, and sophomores Danny Morris and Rashad Washington also played well - despite losing senior fullback Rock Cartwright to a high-ankle sprain on the first series of the game.

"When we lost Rock the first series, that takes a little bit away of what we're trying to do with our fullback," Offensive Coordinator Ron Hudson said. "But quite frankly, I think Josh Scobey is going to be a good player. I think Danny Morris is going to be a real high player for us. And if we can continue to bring the fullbacks along and then, if you have a threat at quarterback like I think we do with Mark and Ell running the ball. I think we're going to be all right.

While both squads combined for 836 yards of offense, they didn't show enough big-play capability to please Snyder.

"That was something that was absent today, maybe not the potential, but the actual creation of big plays during the course of the scrimmage," Snyder said. "There were a few in there, but some of those might have happened by accident."

Across the line of scrimmage, Defensive Coordinator Phil Bennett's units were limited to bland, non-attacking schemes. In fact, the aftermath of the one blitz called by Bennett convinced him not to call another.

Nevertheless, the defense still got the better of the offensive units, Snyder said. Of key interest was the development of the defensive front four, which graduated four seniors from last season. Following spring drills, however, the unit is beginning to take shape with junior Melvin Williams at right end and seniors Eric Everley and Jerry Togiai and sophomore Justin Montgomery as tackles. On Saturday, the front four were led by Williams' two sacks and 10 tackles and Montgomery's five tackles.

"We're coming together," Williams said. "I was kind of questioning it at the beginning of the spring, but we got 15 practices, and I feel more confident - very confident - in the front four."

The defensive secondar, also lost two players - cornerbacks Dyshod Carter and Jerametrius Butler — but junior Terence Newman is proving himself more than able to take over, Bennett said.

"I thought Terence has had one of those springs that's going to vault him into being one of those special players," he said. "He's in a groove right now, and I hope that continues. He was physical, and he's got good vision."

Overall, the defense is pretty solid. especially with three of the five team captains - sophomore linebacker Terry Pierce, senior linebacker Ben Leber and senior safety Jon McGraw - coming from

"Coach always says chemistry is an overused word, but I like our chemistry. You have a sophomore middle linebacker that got elected captain by his peers - that's pretty impressive, to me, by what he does," Bennett said. "I think with he and Ben and Jon, we've got three of the five captains, so I'm expecting some strong leadership, which I think we got that this spring."

Quarterback controversy to continue

By DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

K-State fans might have been looking for an answer to the quarterback controversy following Saturday's spring game, but they won't get one quite

Despite Ell Roberson's steady performance as the starter for the Purple squad - completing 11of-21 passing for 176 yards, and rushing for 65 yards on five carries - head coach Bill Snyder said he didn't feel the sophomore widened the gap between he and junior transfer Marc Dunn.

"I don't know if that's necessarily the case. I didn't see it that way," Snyder said. "This is just an off-the-cuff remark, but I think it's about where it. was at 10 o'clock this morning."

Perhaps that's because Dunn put up some big numbers for the Purple squad as well - connecting on 4-of-5 passes for 118 yards and two touchdowns. Yet, while under center for the White squad, the Brigham City, Utah, native struggled against the Cats' No. 1 defense, with just 2-of-7 passing for 20 yards to his name.

Nonetheless, it was enough to impress his counterpart, Roberson.

"Dunn did real good. He made some good plays.

"Dunn did real good. He made some good plays. I would say he had almost a perfect day with the things he had done."

- Ell Roberson, quarterback

I would say he had almost a perfect day with the things he had done," Roberson said, "I told him that we have to feed off each other. And he went out there, did what he did, and I went out there, and I did what I had to do." Dunn didn't think he had the perfect day Roberson expressed, but he was quick to return the compliment.

"See, I think Ell had a good game, too, when it comes down to it. I think Ell did a lot of great things

And Snyder's evaluation of Roberson? Not necessarily bad, but nothing great.

"I thought Ell had kind of an average start. I think there was a phase in the second half where I thought he was kind of on track, and then we kind of broke that groove by taking him out and putting somebody else in. Sometimes when you do that you stifle the progress.

Dunn's debut as a Wildcat rendered much the same response "I thought Marc did some good things," Snyder said. I thought he had a few nice throws that were on the ground that receivers dropped. I thought he had some overthrows and some inconsistency as far as accuracy was concerned, and I thought he showed that he has a little bit of athletic ability."

Yet, as Snyder has said all along, it's important not to forget the other two Cats vying for the starting quarterback position - senior leremy Milne and sophomore Jeff Schwinn.

Snyder said Milne, who split time with the Purple and White squads, probably didn't have the spring game performance indicative of his recent progress in practice. He did combine to complete 8of-18 passing for 95 yards, but threw two interceptions - one in the end zone.

Schwinn, on the other hand, played with the White squad all afternoon, pitted against the Cats' top defensive unit. The walk-on managed 14-of-26 passing for 126 yards and one interception.

MIKE SHEPHERD / Collegian

Spring game, NFL draft top weekend sports news Synder figures will be the most

DAVID PLOUS

There are very few days that produce as many interesting sports stories as Saturday did.

Locally, you have the K-State football spring game. Regionally, you've got your KC Chiefs making news. Nationally, the annual NFL Draft took center stage on ESPN and ESPN 2. Internationally, British Heavyweight champion Lennox Lewis put his title on the line. All of what happened Saturday deserves its own column, but I am going to combine it all into one.

It looks like Coach Bill Snyder still will have to answer all the quarterback controversy questions this summer and next fall. Neither Marc Dunn nor Ell Roberson really stood out Saturday. However, Roberson was very effective on the ground with the option, carrying five times for 67 yards. It will be interesting to see who actually starts the first game - these two QBs have such different styles. Roberson is a scrambling, playmaker type while Dunn is more of the classic drop back passer. It will just come down to which style effective with the rest of the offense. Besides the big

QB question, I have two others following Saturday's game. Why was the first team offense playing against the second team defense and the second team offense playing against the first team defense? The starters played against the backups, I am sure there's some reason behind the 44-6 score. The other is the status of returning starter defensive tackle DeVane Robinson, who played with white (second) team Saturday but isn't listed in the Spring Football Prospectus. Hopefully, he will be on the team for sure when the season starts since the defensive live was depleted as Monty Beisel and Mario Fatafehi left for the NFL.

In other football news, the Chiefs did some dealing on draft day. They sealed the deal for QB Trent Green and also picked up wide receiver/returner Tony Horne, both from St. Louis. Hey, I wonder if KC could score a ball boy or a soda vendor from the Rams, maybe for a conditional draft pick? They've taken just about everything else from the Rams. They also signed RB Priest Holmes to a fiveyear deal from the Ravens. Holmes started for them until the Ravens drafted Jamal Lewis.

With their first draft pick, the Chiefs selected DT Eric Downing from Syracuse (and Coffeyville Community College). Get excited about this guy - ESPN.com says that he lacks physical quality and isn't much of a pass rusher. You have to figure Carl Peterson for at least one semi-boring pick in the first three rounds. They did pick up Marvin "Snoop" Minnis from Florida State. He was an All-American in some publications and should fit in well in Dick Vermiel's high-octane system.

The biggest story of the day happened late at night. WBC and IBF Heavyweight Champion Lennox Lewis got knocked out by Hasim Rahman, a 15-1 underdog, in the fifth round. Lennox "Yeah, I'll super-size that" Lewis came into the fight weighing 253 pounds, the most he has weighed for a fight. His loss killed any shot of a proposed $100-million fight with Mike Tyson. The funniest part of the whole thing is that he took some time off from training recently to film a movie, "Ocean Eleven," with George Clooney and Julia Roberts. Hope it was worth it.

One other quick thing that went down Saturday (I am sure nobody missed this): the XFL had its championship game. The Los Angles Xtreme beat the San Francisco Demons, 38-6. You just knew the Xtreme would pull it off - it's just their year.

Senior relief pitcher shines against UCLA

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

It was the bottom of the sixth inning Friday afternoon when head coach Mike Clark had to make a choice.

After giving up one run in each of the game's first five innings, starter Luke Robertson retired three straight in the top half of the sixth to keep the Cats within one, 5-4.

Robertson was tiring, understandably, for the junior after throwing 119 pitches at a talented UCLA lineup. On deck was the nation's leading hitter in designated hitter Brian Baron - that's when Clark made the decision. Reliever Scott Tallman had been warming up in the K-State bullpen, and with the game on the line, the senior would be taking over on the mound. Tallman entered the series with a 2.84 ERA in 19 innings of work with 12 strikeouts, but perhaps his biggest strikeouts of the year would come later in the "He's been great," Clark said.

"He's done an awesome job, so you're going to have to go out there and beat him. He doesn't walk many batters, and he goes right at people. Tallman did just that against Baron, striking the Bruin out looking to start the inning. Four batters and another strikeout later, and Clark looked like a

"That was a great outing by him, and he's been doing that for several weeks," he said.

Tallman was quick to share the spotlight, though, and he said his appearance was made possible by a solid six-inning, sixstrikeout effort from Robertson.

"He got us there definitely,"

Most memorable 2000 football moment: Victory over Nebraska

Nov. 11, 2000. The clock read 6:06 remaining in the fourth quarter, and Nebraska had a 28-23 advantage.

The Cornhuskers had just taken the lead on back-to-back touchdown runs by I-back Dan Alexander to start the period, and K-State needed a late drive desperately.

With the ball at its own 38-yard line, the Wildcat offense, led by senior quarterback Jonathan Beasley, marched its way into the NU red zone.

Second and goal: 12-yard line. Beasley dropped back in the pocket, calmly read the defense and fired a bullet over the middle - hitting a streaking Quincy Morgan in stride. The senior wide-out darted across the snowcovered turf, making his way to the left corner of the end zone - and giving the Cats the go-ahead score. K-State-29, Nebraska-28.

"I think it was a statement drive for this team - knowing our backs were against the wall." Beasley said after the game.

"Nebraska scored two big touchdowns against us, and we came back and had a drive like

"Nebraska's a great team, and they're physical. All 11 guys on their defense, they hit us and hit us and hit us. And we were able to take those hits and come out with the knockout punch when it

And the Cat defense kept the Huskers for the final 2:52, making history once more, as K-State downed the Big Red for just the second time in 32 years.

Best place to study: Hale

K-State students agree: the best place to study on campus is Hale Library.

Scott Harmon, junior in computer science, said the 24-hour study area in the lower part of Hale Library is his favorite place to study in the library.

"The 24-hour study area is nice because it's more open than any other part of the library," Harmon said. "You can talk loudly without interrupting other people. You're also allowed to eat there - unlike any other part of the library. The whole atmosphere makes it easy for me to stay awake," Harmon said.

If someone is looking for a more quiet place to study in the library, Harmon said he suggests moving upstairs. "If I need it to be really quiet while I'm studying, I'll go to third floor," Harmon

Most effective class-skipping excuse: Death of a relative

Many K-State students face days in their collegiate careers when they make the decision to skip a class or all classes for the

And students give a variety of excuses to miss class.

Kevin Blake, assistant professor of geography, said he would agree that death is the most widely used excuse, and he sees it about five times a semester in classes of around 250

Blake said the excuse is not usually for a close relative, but saying a grandparent passed away is a common reason.

He said he relies on the honor system for these types of excuses,

"I never have, yet, stopped to ask for a funeral announcement because it is a serious enough topic," he said. "I am more wanting to trust people because it can happen, and I know from personal experi-

Most hated rival: Nebraska Comhuskers

Nebraska was voted the Most Hated Rival in the 2001 Reader's Choice Awards.

Carolyn McMannama, a Nebraska native, said that because the locations of K-State and Nebraska are relatively close, fans can travel to the away games and root for their favorite team.

"Nebraska is one of the biggest Big 12 teams that we have beaten and then we almost beat them again," McMannama, sophomore in exercise science, said. "I think it gave us such an ego boost to beat them once that now we expect to beat

Before coming to K-State, McMannama said she did not like K-State, but now that she is here, she hates Nebraska, which keeps her from being well-liked at home. - Alison Vrtiska

Quirkiest roommate habit: Dirty dishes in sink

When people live together, they get to know one another very well - sometimes too well. They get to discover one another's habits - some good and some not so good.

Leaving dirty dishes in the sink can be an annoying roommate habit.

Joe Elkington, sophomore in math, said he and his roommates began the year with a dish rotation - each would do the dishes on his respective days. When one of his roommates moved out, however, Elkington said the rotation became nonex-

"They'd stack up days upon days," he said. "I just started doing them because I was getting tired of it.

'I'm not like a nagging wife, but I just don't like it when dishes are rotting in the sink because we get ants and cockroaches."

Elkington said he and his roommates have reached an equilibrium. He does the dishes, and they kind of rinse them off.

"Now they know to keep the dishes relatively clean, so I won't throw things at them or go medieval on them."

Best class for an easy A: Appreciation of Architecture

Appreciation of Architecture is known as an "easy A" class around campus.

"It's an appreciation class," David Seamon, professor of architecture, said. "If students come to class and take notes, they should do well."

Seamon said it is a popular class to take and has a high enrollment each semester. The class is closed for fall 2001.

Amber Swafford, senior in anthropology, took the class and received an A. She said she agreed with Seamon that attendance helps make the class easier.

'You can't pass that class unless you go,"

The students are forced to work for their A, Seamon said, He said he was surprised the students voted it as the easiest A on campus, he said.

"It demonstrates that it's a good course," he said, "a fair course, where I think if the students put effort to it, they can do well."

Hardest class (tie): Calculus 1

Many K-State students think Calculus I is one of the toughest classes on campus.

"Calculus has always been a challenging course in math." Andrew Bennett, associate professor of mathematics, said.

"It's a step forward. In high school, the students are asked to work with numbers and find numbers for the answers, but in calculus, you work with functions. And functions are the answers."

Bennett said Calculus I would be difficult at any school due to the conceptual change in thinking that students must go

The majority of Calculus I students are freshmen in engineering or science, he

"Yes, of course it's difficult," Bennett said. "You didn't think college was going be easy, did you?"

Principles of Finance

The students at K-State named the Principles of Finance class one of the two hardest classes on campus.

"Of course it's one of the toughest. Why wouldn't it be?" Stan Elsea, associate dean of management, said. "It was tough when I took it 20 years ago."

The preparatory class is the only finance class that many business majors take.

"It's not any tougher than calculus,"

Elsea said.

Greg Mazeouch, senior in finance, said he agreed that the finance class could be tough because it involves a lot of math and calculations.

"It's more quantitative and kinda hard to do," Mazeouch said. "If you read the book and study, it's not too bad,"

Best gift when he/she is mad: Flowers

Flowers are an easy way out of being in trouble, Lisa Cruzeiro, sophomore in kinesiology, said.

"My boyfriend used to send me flowers all the time to apologize to me," Cruzeiro said. "It was a good way to start talking, so that I could hear the real reason we were fighting."

Cruzeiro said her boyfriend doesn't send her flowers anymore because she told himflowers don't solve the problem.

2000-2001 best K-State male athlete: Jonathan Beasley

Quarterback Jonathan Beasley's K-State career had enough ups and downs to inspire a.Worlds of Fun roller coaster.

After showing promise as a freshman behind Brian Kavanagh, Beasley was expected to challenge transfer Michael Bishop for the starting position as a sophomore in 1997. However, Beasley reported in the fall nearly 40 pounds overweight, and Bishop gained the spot for the next two

Then, as a junior in 1999, Beasley was named starter but struggled enough at times - with an undisclosed shoulder injury that fans called for backup Adam Helm. Finally, as a senior in 2000, No. 18 had to beat out fan-favorite Ell Roberson before leading K-State to a Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl victory over Tennessee.

Even last season, Beasley's stock rose, fell and rose again. He looked brilliant at Colorado, dismal at Texas A&M and was named offensive MVP of the Cotton Bowl.

Throughout his tenure as a Cat, though, Beasley has had the respect of head coach Bill Snyder.

"I'm always proud of Jon," Snyder said after the Cotton Bowl. "He's had good games and bad games, good plays and bad plays, but I'm always proud of him because he's a quality person, a quality young man, a gracious young man and a humble young man. He's a team player from the get-go. He has all the great intrinsic values that you like to have in young people and that makes me very, very proud of him.

"Whatever happens on the field is extra." - Michael Noll

2000-2001 best K-State female athlete: Nicole Ohlde

Forward Nicole Ohlde took the women's basketball freshman record book and made it her own.

Over the course of the season, the Clay Center, Kan., native set the freshman records for points (36) and rebounds (19) in a game and points (464), rebounds (220) and field goals (191) in a season.

Ohlde also became the first freshman in school history to lead the team in scoring (17.2) and rebounds (8.1) per game.

In honor of her achievements, Ohlde was named the Big 12 Freshman of the Year and listed on three national all-freshman teams.

Perhaps the greatest testament to Ohlde's ability, though, is the respect given to her by other teams.

"I'm really impressed with her consistency and with her competitive intensity because this is rare for a freshman to see double teams almost every time she catches. the ball," head coach Deb Patterson said. "And I think that right there is a statement about the respect that other teams have for her already."

More impressive still, Ohlde averaged such impressive numbers even when she was the only player scoring for K-State.

"Even on nights where we've struggled offensively to put a lot of points on the board, even on nights where we've struggled with turnovers, it doesn't matter what adversity we face," Patterson said, "she's continued to dig in and make contributions."

Best thing about K-State: Friendliness

Friendliness is contagious at K-State. This environment is one of the top reasons why people decided to attend K-State, Carrie Cook, admission represenour friendliness."

The friendly atmosphere is a tradition, she said, that is carried on through the students.

THE RESIDENCE A

"I think the students here like the friendliness and want it to last for many years," Cook said. "When someone smiles at a stranger and says 'Hi,' it makes the other person want to do the same thing to someone else."

Most annoying thing: Parking

Parking topped the list as the most annoying aspect of the university.

The unsolvable dilemma continues to give some K-State students constant headaches. Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said students do not realize that K-State's parking could be much worse.

"I think people who say it's the most annoying haven't been to other universities," Abbott said. "There are many other campuses who have it a lot worse than we K-State has 10,000 parking stalls, which is less than half of the student population. Abbott said some of the parking problems will be relieved after the university provides a temporary parking lot east of Weber Hall.

"Parking may never be a solvable issue," Abbott said. "If we're finally able to provide parking for everyone, then some would revert to complaining about not parking close enough."

Favorite place to watch a game: KSU Stadium (live) and Scoreboard (bar)

Athletics are a key part of K-State student life, and deciding where to watch games is a key component as well.

Scoreboard manger D.J. Bruce said the main thing that attracts people to this bar is that people know that they can always watch a game there.

"We have eight different big screen televisions and 13 other 25-inch televisions," Bruce said. "There isn't a bad place in the bar to watch."

Bruce said Scoreboard has two satellites and 10 receivers that allow 10 different sporting events to be viewed simultane ously.

"We have every FOX network, which carries 23 regional sports, major league baseball, NFL, NHL, NBS, college football and basketball," Bruce said.

Bruce also said there are three different rooms consisting of a main room, a pool room and a small private room in the back for the viewing of all sports and to adjust to volume requests.

For watching a game live, KSU Stadium came out on top.

Kirstin Anspaugh, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said she loves watching games there because she usually sits in the first couple of rows in ICAT.

"We see everything on the field, and it is a fun time, especially with my rowdy friends," Anspaugh said.

Anspaugh said her favorite part of the KSU Stadium experience is the pre-game.

"When the team runs out on the field, the place goes wild, and it pumps up the team and crowd," she said.

Best place to play pool: Fast Eddy's

Twenty-six regulation pool tables and hourly rates make Fast Eddy's the place to play pool in Manhattan.

Fast Eddy's prides itself in having a fun atmosphere in which for students to hang our.

"We have good music, a game room and, of course, a full bar," Brandi Deppen, daytime manager, said. Fast Eddy's also has a foosball table, two dart boards and nine televisions. Those extra features make the wait for tables on the weekends less obnoxious to people, Deppen said. "During the weekend, we're usually full. But there's plenty of other things to do while you wait for a table," Deppen said. "It's just a fun place to be."

Best Selection of CDs: Streetside Records

Whether it's rock, classical, soundtracks, jazz or heavy metal. Streetside Records has it. Streetside Records in Aggieville was voted the best selection of CDs, and Andy Houston, Streetside manager, said he isn't surprised. "I've been told that people think we have the biggest selection." Houston said.

Besides selection, Houston said there are many other things that make Streetside stand above the competition.

"The customer service is great, our prices are really low, and we keep the popular music in stock," he said. Houston also said if helps that Streetside is a Ticketmaster outlet.

"Some of the recent ticket sales have been crazy," Houston said.

He said it is all of this that keeps customers coming back time and again ... and again ... and again.

"There's some people you see in here almost every day," Houston said. "It's really

Best up-and-coming band: Ruskabank

Ruskabank has had a busy year, and they show no signs of slowing down anytime soon.

Voted the best up-and-coming band for the 2001 Collegian Reader's Choice Awards, Ruskabank receives the award coming off a tour of several U.S. states.

Dave Studnicka, who plays trombone and is lead singer of the band, said Ruskabank has had fun while touring within the last few months.

"We did a West Coast tour, as well as Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri when we got back," Studnicka said. "That was really exciting.

The tours came shortly after the summer 2000 release of their album "I Don't Think You Hear Me, Though. Studnicka said another album, as well as more touring, is in the works.

"We're probably going to tour this summer, and we're concentrating on our third album," he said. "We're hoping to

Cultural Experience Festival provides chance to learn about Japanese culture

A paper swan caught the attention of many visitors Saturday in the K-State Student Union.

The swan, which stood eight to 10 inches in height, had been crafted by folding square sheets of paper in the traditions of the Japanese artform origami.

The swan was on display as a part of the fifth Central Kansas Japanese Festival. sponsored by the Japanese Appreciation Alliance, the Japanese Student Association and the Department of Modern Languages.

Ethan Repp, fifth-year student in architecture, showed off a table filled with examples of origami, including the swan and gave a demonstration to interested visitors.

"A lot of people that come by stop to check things out," Repp said, "but they are particularly intrigued by the swan."

Repp, who is enrolled in Japanese 4, said he didn't fold the swan, but said he estimated that it took 10 to 15 sheets of paper and at least an 1 1/2 hours of work to create the paper bird.

Sonia Jarboe, fifth-year student in architecture, said she stopped at the table because she was interested in origami and because she and Repp are friends. She tried her hand at origami, watching a Japanese tea ceremony earlier in the afternoon.

"It was just nice getting to see a part of their culture that you don't normally get to see everyday," Jarboe said.

Festival organizers said the Central Kansas Japanese Festival was organized for just that reason. The festival provided K-State students and Manhattan community members the chance to learn and experience Japanese culture.

The afternoon featured martial arts demonstrations, calligraphy presentations and chopsticks battles, among other activities. K-State students in lapanese classes also gave various presentations in Japanese and participated in a Japanese speech contest.

Sue Ruhnke, a second-year festival volunteer, said she particularly liked the students' presentations, but she first became involved with the festival because she likes the Japanese culture and enjoys listening to the language.

"I think other people also come out to the festival because they like to hear the language," she said, "Also, I think Americans don't get a lot of exposure to the Japanese culture, and it's fun to watch the students give their presentations and demonstrations in Japanese.

Yumiko Suzuki, junior in graphic design, said her Japanese heritage was the main reason she got involved with the festival. Suzuki came to the United States from Sendal, Japan, 21/2 years ago:

"It's fun to see American people doing Japanese things," she said.

Endeavor installs robot arm on station

The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - Two spacewalking astronauts successfully installed a massive billiondollar robot arm on the international space station on Sunday and unfolded the two-handed limb.

"Look at the size of this thing," space shuttle Endeavour crewman Chris Hadfield said as he tugged open the 58-foot, 3,600-pound arm. The arm remained bent at the elbow and was to be extended Monday by the space station crew working inside.

It was Canada's biggest day ever in space: the first Canadian spacewalker hooking up the new Canadian-built robot arm on space station Alpha.

At the conclusion of the sevenhour spacewalk, Mission Control congratulated Hadfield and his U.S. spacewalking partner, Scott Parazynski, in English and French and played a recording of "Oh Canada," the country's anthem. The recording was made at a Montreal hockey game.

"We're real proud of your work up there getting Canadarm2 operational," said Steven MacLean, a Canadian astronaut working in Mission Control. "And if you turn around and look down, I believe you're right over Newfoundland."

The new arm will serve as a high-tech construction crane throughout the lifetime of the space station. With a hand on both ends and seven joints along its length, the arm is designed to move across the space station like an inchworm and perform chores wherever needed

Hadfield's performance was especially impressive: He had to fight burning eyes as he worked 240 miles up. His eyes began filling with tears midway through the spacewalk, and he had to shut them. After several minutes, his left eye improved.

"My right eye is kind of halfclosed all the time, but I think it's going to clear," Hadfield assured his crewmates inside Endeavour. "I tell you, it's weird spacewalking and floating through space with your eyes closed."

NASA officials suspect helmetantifog soap or sweat got in his eyes.

Pilot Jeffrey Ashby began the day's events, using Endeavour's 50foot robot arm like a crane to lift the new station arm from the shuttle payload bay.

An hour later, Hadfield and Parazynski quickly connected power, data and video cables to the new arm, bringing it to life. Then they removed eight 4-foot-long bolts that secured the arm to its launch cradle, "Unleash the arm," Parazynski said.

Parazynski positioned himself beneath the arm like a weightlifter to raise it 35 degrees. "Getting ready for the Olympics clean-and-jerk," he said. He hoisted it, then called out to Hadfield: "Unfold away."

Perched on the end of the shuttle crane for traction, Hadfield unfolded the new station arm while being lifted by crane operator Ashby. Once the arm was opened, the spacewalkers drilled expandable fasteners into hinges to permanently bolt the pieces together. They had trouble tightening the fasteners and had to apply extra force.

'Fingered' gets thumbs down

Film's shock value, grotesque humor gets few laughs

"FREDDY GOT FINGERED"

有公公公公 MOVIE REVIEW BY CORBIN H. CRABLE

Those are the two words that first come to mind when watching anything by Tom Green. In his new movie, "Freddy Got Fingered," Green plays Gord, a 28-year-old unemployed man who is living at home with his parents (Rip Torn and Julie Hagerty). Gord has huge dreams but never does anything to try to accomplish them. After many unsuccessful attempts to live on his own, Gord keeps coming home, much to the dismay of his villain-like father.

The cast is pathetic. It's a shame to see Torn and Hagerty resort to this kind of film after looking at their successful careers on the silver screen. Other actors, such as Harland Williams and Anthony Michael Hall (Remember "The Breakfast Club" and "Weird Science"?) were chosen to be in this movie either because they are friends of Green or they simply can't get any other work.

Green's humor is grotesque, disturbing and absolutely disgusting, to say the least. His incessant shouting and screaming has all the creative comic insight of a 5 year old. This is one thing, but even some Green fans will think he crosses the line in this movie with his jokes about child abuse, disabled people, sadomasochism and bestiality. This junk makes movies by the Farrelly brothers look like "Leave it to Beaver."

In a sick, demented sort of way, Green is a pioneer in the sense that he handles such taboo subjects with a little too much ease. No one has dared to make such jokes and sight gags before. That said, there are some issues that merely shouldn't be the target of a comedy. With his own show on MTV. Green has teetered on the edge with his humor. With this movie, he has crossed the line and alienated even more people. When all is said and done, it will be the downfall of his career.

Movie's flat jokes fall short of humorous

"CROCODILE DUNDEE IN LA"

*公公公公

MOVIE REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

the first time, it was amusing the second time and 13 years later, the third installment of "Crocodile Dundee" is just plain annoying.

At 60 years old, Paul Hogan doesn't look the least bit an intimidating, rugged crocodile hunter from the Outback. He just looks too old for the part. Maybe he wasn't making quite enough money from the Subaru commercials he's been making and had to make some quick cash by reviving the beloved hunter. What is supposed to be a light fish-out-of-water comedy just ends up falling flat with more jokes received with groans than laughter. The movie easily will be forgotten. along with other Hogan movies like

"Lightning lack." You know the story, Mick "Crocodile" Dundee (Paul Hogan), is a survivor of the Outback of Australia. able to accomplish amazing feats in the bush, but unable to comprehend simple ideas in the big city.

During his stay, Dundee nearly single-handedly takes on an international crime ring. The first two movies were in New York, but this one is in Los Angeles. But right down to the recycled jokes, it still is the same movie.

movie aren't just barrowed from the first two movies. They are. actually reused. A. crossdresser, a big city mugger and even a knife that narrowly misses a had guy's family jewels all are jokes lifted from the first two movies.

While Hogan's acting abilities are sub-par to say the least, his personality still is strong onscreen, which makes the character still somewhat enjoyable if you can get past how hokey the whole thing is. Only so many jokes can be made about the idea of "Crocodile" Dundee responding to the idiosyncrasies of Los Angeles, and the movie relies heavily on stereotypes for jokes.

Attempts are made to keep the audience interested in the movie by throwing in cameo roles from the likes of George Hamilton and Mike Tyson, who gives a yoga lesson to Dundee and his son. These feeble attempts to pull the audience into the movie go nowhere with a plot straight out of a second-rate action.

Hogan needs to hang up his crocodile tooth-adorned hat for good and retire a dated character who doesn't look fit to make an appearance on the Discovery Channel.

Album's message sincere

MUSIC REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

Ani DiFranco's new double album, "Revelling/Reckoning" is a roller coaster of emotions, styles and themes that come together to form a long-winded, but sincere, message.

Marking DiFranco's 12th original studio album in 11 years, the album is one more piece of proof that DiFranco shows no sign of letting up. No one writes and releases as much material as she does in a world where artists regularly put at least two yearsbetween albums so they can reach maximum selling potential. "Revelling/Reckuning" is more than just a double compact dise; it is more like two separate albums packaged together as one project that still seems to flow tagether.

The first disc, "Revelling," is a departure from DiFranco's normal style because it features 13 tracks she wrote with her band in mind, throwing jazz and funk feels into the full sound. The second disc, "Reckoning," is more of the usual DiFranco style, stripped down to her voice and an acoustic guitar most of the time.

The two discs cover a wide array of subject matter, from matters of the heart on "Rock, Paper, Scissors" to social issues on "Subdivision." And in the politically motivated "Your Next Bold Move," DiFranco shows the mixture of punk ideology and folk attitudes she is so well known for as she sings "Coming of age during the plague/Of Reagan and Bush/Watching capitalism gun down democracy/It had this funny effect on me/I guess." Such long-winded artists often seem to have trouble knowing where to end things, and perhaps it would have been wiser for DiFranco to cut

"REVELLING/RECKONING" some of the material Wh material. What she has to say likely could have been said in the space of one CD, with many of the tracks on the two discs sounding interchangeable. Something is to be said for the experimental qualities of "Revelling," but in terms of creating a strong album, the two discs could have been trimmed. Still, the songs are sincere. : DiFranco is an artist who seems to write so much that she must find an ; outlet somehow, and her fans likely won't mind paying the price of the second disc for such a dynamic

KSU graduate discusses importance of schooling

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Tamara Young Blackman, 1988 K-State alumna, speaks during the Legacy Lecture on Friday afternoon in the Union Little Theatre.

By OLENA NIKOLAYENKO Kansas State Collegian

Tamara Young Blackman, a 1988 K-State graduate in social sciences and speaker for the Legacy Lecture series, shared the moments of her student and professional life with audience members Friday.

The event was sponsored by the K-State Student Foundation with the assistance of the KSU Foundation.

"We try to bring back somebody who graduated from K-State and show students what a degree can do," said Todd Dobberstein, Legacy Lecture chairman and senior in physics. Blackman combines many qualities that set her apart from others, Dobberstein said. As a and mother of four and a wife of a professional basketball player, she founded her own business and became the president and owner of Write-Now Inc., a wholesale stationery manufacturer with offices in Dallas and New York.

"It's a good example of how you can wear different hats and still be successful," Dobberstein said. "A lot of you are not even 25 years old," Blackman said. "I have to go back in my memory 25 years ago and recall now i started my journey.

She said her mother always emphasized the importance of getting an education. "In my house, it was not an option. It was expected of me to go to the college," Blackman said. "Back in 1977, I remember getting the kisses and hugs and then reality sinking in. I could not believe my mother left me in Kansas. I did not know anybody

Like many freshmen, Blackman had the overwhelming feeling of being lost.

"When I finally had a grip of myself. I realized that I got an opportunity to make my own decisions. I also realized that it was my responsibility to attend classes and succeed," Blackman said.

Psychology was one of Blackman's favorite subjects at K-State.

"That day he taught us not to make judgments appearance. We often look at people and determine whether they are good and bad." Blackman advised those in the audience to take in what they parents tell us, 'Do not touch the stove! It'll burn you.' When we grow up, parents tell us to avoid a pitfall, but we do not listen and bump our head against the wall." Blackman promised her mother four years of hard work to finish her degree, but she completed her senior year lacking eight credits. A few years later, married and with kids, she went back to school.

Studying together with 18-year olds and 19-year olds, the 28-year old Blackman recalled the professor's question, 'What ages is middle-age?" "One kid stood up and said, '30,' I thought, 'is life over already?" Blackman said she did not give up. Instead, she became an entrepreneur. "It was my fifth child," "You can put Blackman said. your whole self into it and get out a lot." She concluded her talk by wishing every student in graduate.

Chris Roberts, freshman in journalism, said he thought Blackman presented her speech well.

"Usually, you see speakers who talk about what they have accomplished and not how they have done it," Roberts said. "It is the process that is most important. The speaker did an excellent job of it."

Campaign focuses on exercise

By ANJETTA McQUEEN

The Associated Press WASHINGTON, D.C. - Attention

kids: Drop that remote control, put down those fattening snacks munched while watching television and go outside to play.

That's the message in a campaign beginning Monday that encourages youngsters and their families to turn off their sets and exercise more.

"This is the most overweight, obese generation of children in our history," Surgeon General David Satcher said in an interview. "The message this week is about saving lives."

the no-television pledge said his children, ages 5 and 10, will skip the few hours of public television they usually are allowed. "It's just such a fixture in our

One parent whose family is taking lives," said Tom Cara, an advertising businessman from Niles, Ill., who is leading the campaign in his community. "But we have to set an example for our children."

Studies show U.S. children are watching, on average, 1,000 hours of television each year, or about three hours every day. At the same time, about one in 15 school-age children is overweight.

Those numbers add up to a public health crisis, Satcher said. As adults, today's young couch potatoes will have heart disease, diabetes and other life-threatening ailments, he

"If children are spending a thousand hours in front of the TV, they're not doing much else," said Jennifer Kurz, spokeswoman for the TV Turnoff Network, which says television is the main culprit for poor exercise habits.

Entire families keep the set on eight hours a day, says the nonprofit group. It hopes 6 million children and adults will turn off their televisions and use time to toss footballs, take walks or ride bikes. Since 1995, the group has organized pledge drives through schools and community centers.

With the added features of multiple channels, video games and DVD movies, television time is sure

"This is about turning on life," she said.

The campaign coincides with major broadcast industry meetings this week.

In recent years, executives from the TV networks and movie studios have been criticized for targeting their products to children, particularly when the shows contain sex and violence.

Robert Sachs, president of the National Cable Television Association, said the real question is whether parents should take charge of what their children watch.

"But denying children TV is no more likely to encourage kids to enjoy reading, for instance, than denying them ice cream would encourage them to like brussels sprouts," he said.

The effort to get families to exercise more at home comes as budget-strapped schools are cutting recess periods. "They are making decisions that are pennywise and pound foolish," Satcher said of the

Communities battle flood; river crest rise expected

By DON BABWIN The Associated Press

More rain fell along the swollen Mississippi River on Sunday as residents piled their sandbags higher against advancing water.

Even more rain was expected overnight into today, but it was not expected to fall heavily across a wide area. Some rain already was factored into flood crest predictions, said Rick Kinney, a National Weather Service meteorologist based in the Quad Cities of Iowa and Illinois

"It would have to fall in a lot larger area to bump up the [flood] crest in any of these places," said Terry Stieger, emergency manager of the Army Corps of Engineers' office at Rock Island, Ill.

The river had crested Saturday in East Dubuque, Ill., at about 25.4 feet, more than a foot below the record of 26.8 feet, but still was rising down river where communities kept up their work to shore up their defenses.

"We had the National Guard walking the levee all night to see if there were any soft spots in it," said Eugene Flack, mayor of Savanna, Ill., where a handful of homes had flooded as of Sunday. "The water's come up 6 to 7 inches from yesterday (but) everything is holding its own.'

In the tiny community of Niota, Ill., the river was at 19.7 feet early Sunday and was expected to crest Wednesday at about 21.5 feet, volunteer firefighter Christi Rutledge said. The town's levee was 22 feet high

"We are building up our levees as we speak," she said. "If the river crests where we expect it to, it will sit right up at the top of the levees but it won't go over.'

Across the river in Iowa, the rising water breached a wall of sandbags around the riverside baseball stadium at Davenport, the only major town along the upper Mississippi that doesn't have permanent flood protection.

The water covered everything but the diamond after a concrete patio in left field buckled beneath a wall of sandbags, said Kevin Krause, owner-president of the minor league Quad City River Bandits.

"You know, you get used to it. Every so often we get it, and there's not much you can do about it," said Jim Keyoth looking over the ballpark from the nearby Centennial Bridge,

In downtown Davenport, Iowa Army National Guard members used half a dozen pumps to remove rain water that had pooled during the night around backed-up storm

"Hopefully, this will all blow over, and we'll be in a lot better shape. I'll be a lot happier when it crests," Sgt. 1st Class Dewayne Mahlstedt said.

The river is expected to crest Tuesday at Davenport at 22 to 22.5 feet, the third major flood there in eight years and uncomfortably close to the record of 22.63 feet, set

Farther upstream, heavy thunderstorms expected to hit southeastern Minnesota had the potential to raise the Mississippi by an inch or two at La Crosse, Wis., sald National Weather Service meteorologist Mike Nelson.

The river crested Wednesday at La Crosse at 16.4 feet - flood stage is 12 feet - and it had dropped to 15.7 on Sunday.

'We just don't need any more bad weather. We just need Mother Nature to cooperate," said Lori Getter, a spokeswoman for the Wisconsin Division of Emergency Management.

Fuel prices increase across U.S.

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

Reminiscent of last summer, fuel prices are rising dramatically nation-

"Traditionally, gas prices will go up near the summer months," said Kyle McNorton, salesman for Capital City Oil in Topeka. "There is usually more of a demand for the gas, so naturally the prices will rise.

Supply and demand are the main reasons for the fuel price increase, McNorton said.

"It involves not only OPEC, but refinery and pipeline capacities," he said. "The prices rise when the consumption goes up and the supply is Jeff Davis, manager of De Dec's Conoco in Manhattan, said he has noticed that gas sales vary with the price.

"It is really hit and miss," he said. "Some days we see a decrease in customers because of the high price, but other days we are at normal sales."

The drop in sales is not dramatic because fuel is a necessity for many.

We drop a bit, but then we recover because it is something that people use daily," he said.

At Ampride Service Station, business has remained steady despite the

"The majority of my customers are farmers or construction companies," Dick Simmons, branch manager, said. "They need the gas to do their job, so my

However, Simmons said his customers are not happy about the

"I have to drive to Fort Riley twice a week for classes," she said. "Having that extra expense with fuel really cuts into my budget.

Bank said she spends at least $20 a week driving to class.

"It keeps costing me more as fuel prices increase," she said. "It is almost getting ridiculous."

McNorton, however, said he expects

Terry set career-highs for points (16) and steals (5) against Nebraska on Feb. 14, as well as in rebounds (11) versus Eastern Washington in mid-December.

By CAMILLE BOISSEAU Kansas State Collegian

A windy Kansas day at Colbert Hills Golf Course provided a place for friends and supporters of Anthony Bates to gather.

Anthony Bates, a former K-State football player, died in July as a result of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, a genetic heart disease that often can lead to obstruction of blood flow, an erratic heart beat and death.

An idea by Anthony's parents to help educate people and bring awareness of the disease was the idea behind the golf tournament Monday afternoon.

The goal of the first Anthony Bates Memorial Golf Tournament was to help spread the word about the disease, Sharon Bates, Anthony's mother, said.

"I don't think enough people are aware of how prevalent heart disease is in young children," Bates said. "More attention needs to be focused on this disease with young kids."

Proceeds from the golf tournament will benefit the Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy Association, A Heart for Sports, Ken's Heart and The Chad Foundation. The goal of these organizations is to help parents of young children become aware of HCM and provide opportunities for testing and detecting the disease. "Every year, eight of 1,000 births will have a heart

Kevin Lockett, a K-State alumnus and former K-State football player, said this tournament was an important step in making people more aware of the

Greeneville commander found guilty, formally relieved of command

By JEAN CHRISTENSEN The Associated Press

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii - USS Greeneville Cmdr. Scott Waddle was found guilty of two violations of military law Monday and punished with a letter of reprimand that the Navy Pacific commander said effectively will terminate his career.

Waddle, who said he accepted the punishment, also received a two-month cut to half salary, but that punishment was suspended - meaning Waddle will receive full pay until he retires Oct. 1.

Adm. Thomas Fargo said Waddle created an artificial sense of urgency when he rapidly surfaced the Greeneville on Feb. 9 into the Ehlme Maru, a Japanese high school vessel, killing nine men and Fargo imposed the punishment at an admiral's mast attended by Waddle, a military attorney and several officers at Pearl Harbor Navy Base.

"I understand and accept the punishment that Admiral Fargo imposed. He treated me fairly and with dignity and respect, and I thank him for that," Waddle said in a statement released by his civilian attorney, Charles Gittins. Fargo read his findings at a news conference several hours after issuing them to Waddle at the disciplinary hearing.

The violations represented dereliction in the performance of his duty and negligent hazarding of a vessel, the admiral said.

Fargo issued the letter of reprimand and formally relieved Waddle of his command. He was suspended shortly after the collision.

"Today I found commander Scott Waddle, the former commanding officer of the Greeneville, guilty of committing two violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice," Fargo said.

"These actions will effectively terminate his career," Fargo said, adding that he followed a Court of Inquiry's recommendation in not issuing a court-martial that could have led to more severe punishment.

The Japanese government said the punishment means the United States has accepted responsibility for the collision.

"The Japanese government considers that the U.S. government has acknowledged all responsibilities regarding this incident," said Kazuhiko Koshikawa, spokesman for Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori. "With the measures taken against Waddle and others, their liability has been made clear. These decisions were made under U.S. rules, and the Japanese government does not at this point plan to make any specific demand to the United

"It is regrettable our feeling that the sub's captain should be tried in a military court did not materialize," said Motoyasu Ota, a spokesman for the city of Uwajima where the Ehime Maru was based. "There remains the expectation among family members of the missing victims that it should be clearly proven who was responsible for causing the accident."

Fargo said the Greeneville crew conducted an inadequate search of the surface before the submarine ascended in a demonstration for the benefit of 16 civilians on board and failed to work together to pass information to each other about what lay above.

He said the accident could have been avoided if the Greeneville crew simply had followed Navy procedures "While I regret that my Navy career has ended in this way, I know that I am one of the lucky ones because I survived the accident," Waddle said.

Gittins, in an e-mail to news media shortly after the hearing, said Waddle

Rapper pleads no contest on 2 weapons charges

PONTIAC, Mich. - Grammywinning rapper Eminem pleaded no contest Monday to weapons charges stemming from an argument with associates of a rival Detroit rap

Oakland County Circuit Court Judge Denise Langford Morris said she was not now considering jail time, but said that could change after she reviews the case. Eminem retains the right to withdraw his nocontest pleas at sentencing on June

The 28-year-old pleaded no contest to carrying a concealed weapon - a five-year felony - and to a misdemeanor charge of brandishing a firearm in public in the June 3 argument in Royal Oak. A no-contest plea is not an admission of guilt, but it is treated as a guilty plea for sentencing purposes.

Oakland County Assistant Prosecutor Mark Bilkovic said the prosecution is not ready to make a sentence recommendation.

"I think jail time in this case might stress to people that this is serious," Bilkovic said. "I don't want anyone to rule that out."

Eminem's attorney, Wally Piszczatowski, said his client is anxious to get this behind him and to go back to making music and staying at home with his daughter in the Detroit area.

Piszczatowski said the defense is "very pleased" with the way Morris has handled the case, and that "she is treating Mathers like she would treat anyhody else who comes before her.

Eminem, whose real name is Marshall Mathers III. pleaded guilty on April 10 to a weapons charge in Macomb County Circuit Court and received two years probation. In return, prosecutors dropped an assault charge stemming from a June 4 incident in which Eminem was accused of pistol-whipping a man seen kissing his wife, Kim Mathers, outside a nightclub.

Three witnesses said Eminem pulled a firearm in a public parking lot on lune 3, but he never pointed it at anybody, Bilkovic said. He said Eminem owned the gun legally, but did not have a permit to conceal the weapon and carry it in public

TOPEKA - With four scheduled days left in the 2001 legislative session, a long list of issues remain unresolved

The priorities that legislators cite include increasing spending on education, expanding health insurance coverage to mental illnesses and securing a sufficient energy supply for the state's future.

The last wild passenger pigeon was killed by a 14-year-old farm boy on March 24, 1900. The experience stayed with the boy into his adult life, and, at the age of 82, the elderly share this story with the world. He wrote about it in his book, "Hope is a Thing With Feathers" - a book that is laced with intricate tales of how different birds became extinct with stories like the farm boy who killed the last passenger pigeon.

"You know the end of the story, but you don't know why or how they died," Cokinos said.

The passenger pigeon's death also gave Cokinos a reason to work more diligently on the book, which will be featured in an upcoming issue of People Magazine and has been featured on National Public Radio. He wanted to have the book completed in time for the 100th anniversary of the pigeon's extinc-

Extinction is one of the book's recurring themes. It is a book that chronicles past struggles of environmentalists and provokes future environmental issues.

"The statistics and all the data that we get tend to numb us, and what I hope to do is tell people stories," he said, "so that other species don't go through this."

A walk at Tuttle Creek State Park in 1990 inspired Cokinos to write the book.

Cokinos had been bird-watching. an activity introduced to him by a friend in Indiana. Bird-watching was his way of bringing Indiana's nature, which consists of numerous trees, to Kansas. While at Tuttle, he noticed a strange-looking parakeet flying in the Kansas sky.

He went to David Rintoul. professor of biology, for help and discovered the bird he saw was a Carolina parakeet. It once had inhabitated the eastern portion of the United States, Cokinos learned, and similar birds lived in Kansas.

The discovery fueled other questions and further research.

"I found lots of little mysteries and stories of birds that hadn't really been told," he said.

Cokinos used them in his book. and the stories transcend to the present time as a nation grapples with a set of environmental concerns. For Rintoul, the key issue is balance.

"It is a matter of what we can and cannot have," Rintoul said, referring to the limits that human beings are placing on the environ-

Rintoul said Cokinos' book might go a long way toward changing public opinion on the environment's importance.

For Cokinos, some days he said he believes the world will solve its environmental problems, and other days he said he just gets frustrated. Regardless, he said, steps need to be taken to preserve nature's beauty. "It doesn't make any sense to destroy the wetlands when they perform beautifully and do so many things for us," Cokinos said. Still, the book also could serve as a testimony to Cokinos' perseverance. After all, he first discovered the Carolina parakeet flying in the sky more than 10 years ago. In itself, like the passenger pigeon in his book, his journey is a story worth

It began with six years of research and writing all he could about different birds. The process was somewhat new to Cokinos, having published a poetry book in the early 1990s. Cokinos was set on telling this story when he sent out samples of his work in 1997.

"Almost in desperation, I sent letters out to agents, and I told myself, even the smallest interest, I would keep writing," he said.

What he found were agents eager to publish the book, but he also connected with an editor at Penguin Putnum Inc., a company that liked the book and worked with him while the book was being written.

"It was a rigorous process. He took very tough editing suggestions with grace," Wendy Hubbert, editor at Penguin Putnum, said.

The pace of the project was sped up to culminate with the 100th anniversary of the passenger pigeon's death, and the expedited deadline was helpful to Cokinos.

"I just had to tell the story," he

While writing the book, Cokinos took a semester off from K-State without pay - a time when he constantly was working and untangling tidbits of information.

Things got even busier, Cokinos said, during the semesters he was teaching. However, Cokinos, as a result, had great material for his classes. He discussed examples of his writing and what was going on in the book's editing process.

Shelle Barton, graduate student in English and one of Cokinos' former students, said she found his teaching and outside work inspiring.

As a fiction writer herself, Barton said taking Cokinos' class, a nonfiction workshop, gave her a better appreciation for the genre. It taught her how to do research and appreciate the work.

"He talks about nonfiction almost like it is a philosophy of life," Barton said.

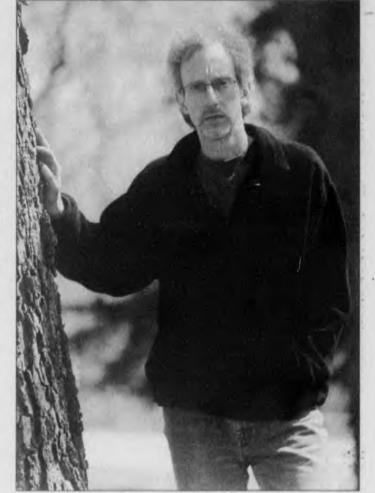

The crazy deadlines and hectic class loads have paid off for Cokinos. The book has been extremely well-received.

"I never thought the book would have this kind of success," Cokinos

He also has a new book in the works for a book on meteorites.

While the topic is different. meteorites and extinct birds can be grouped in the rich history that often goes untold. It is a book he said he hopes to have completed by the middle part of the decade. He said he hopes it will challenge him as a writer.

As for his current book, he appears to be relaxing and enjoying

Should states be able to incorporate the Confederate flag in their official flag?

Putting the Confederate symbol back on flags — yeah, that's a real good idea. Why not just put a swastika right next to it? Great job on that, Alabama, Mississippi, or whatever hick state's doing it this time.

I personally think that the Confederate flag should be illegal. After all, it's kind of treason, isn't it? It's the symbol of an institution that tried to take over our country. And I am not even patriotic.

The Confederate flag does not represent liberty and justice for all. For many African-Americans it represents oppression and slavery. And as far as I am concerned. if they are going to let them fly the Confederate flag, they might as well let them fly flags with swastikas on it. It's totally inappropriate. It's a slap in the face to many African-Americans.

HISTORY'S LESSONS

Whitewashing past events halts progress

Atrocities of World War II came creeping out of history and made it into two recent news stories. It's not the atrocities themselves that are of interest, but how the history is treated.

The first story is from Jedwabne, Poland.

A monument in this village that memorialized the 1.600 lews who were burned to death on July 10, 1941, at the hands of the Nazis was removed this past March by the Polish authorities.

The removal of this monument was prompted by the publication of the book "Neighbors" by Jan Gross, a professor of politics at New York University. Through records of eyewitness accounts and personal interviews, Gross, a Polish emigrant to the United States, revealed that the Jews were not killed by the Nazis, but by Jedwabne's non-Jewish

According to "Neighbors," the massacre was initiated by the Poles and was neither ordered by nor had the participation of the Germans.

responsibility had already been established in a 1949 trial that resulted in the conviction of 14 people.

Typical Polish public response to accusations of anti-Semitism has usually been defensive. Poles like to view themselves as a country of martyrs who have suffered under the aggressive actions of other, more powerful European nations. Poles have ignored their own long history of anti-

The response this time is quite the opposite. The mainstream public debate over the book's findings and other instances of anti-Semilism is accepting of Polish responsibility. Most Poles see it as a national imperative to view their history honestly. Only by coming to terms with their past do Poles believe that their nation can become one that is mature. Poles refer to this as becoming "normal."

It is with this sentiment that Cardinal Jozef Glemp gave a national address over Polish radio pleading the church to ask forgiveness. This summer on the 60th anniversary of the Jedwabne massacre, Poland's president, Aleksander Kwasniewski promised to go to DAVID LEVIN On April 3, the Japanese Ministry of Education approved a middle-school history textbook that presents a whitewashed and distorted account of the atrocities committed by the Japanese during the first half of the 20th century.

The textbook, written by the nationalistic Japanese Society for History Textbook Reform. justifies Japan's occupation of other Asian nations. It claims that the Korean people were simply annoyed with the Japanese occupation of the Korean Peninsula between 1910-1945 and that Japan helped introducing to them the basics of a modernized society.

The textbook emphasizes Japanese suffering while minimizing the atrocities they inflicted on their neighbors. The book downplays the 1937 massacre at Nanjing where the Japanese slaughtered between 150,000-300,000 civilians. There is also no mention of the "comfort women," the euphemism for the female sex slaves kept by the Japanese military.

In an angry response to the textbook, South Korea temporarily recalled its ambassador in Tokyo. The Japanese ambassador in Seoul received a formal protest from South Korea's foreign minister. Korean citizens took their personal protests to the streets outside the Japanese Embassy. There is a call for a general boycott of all Japanese products. Both South and North Korea denounced the textbook at a meeting of the U.N. Commission on Human

The textbook has also raised the ire in China. The Japanese ambassador in Beijing faced the angry Chinese foreign minister suspicion and enmity. Japan could use a lesson from Poland about being "normal."

RE-ADMITTANCE This is a fact of life that I relearned this semester when I walked out of the Ethnique Boutique in Aggieville. It's the little shop sandwiched between Auntie Mae's Parlor and a brick-lined alley. I walked out with my hair weaved into 16 tightly braided rows that traveled from my forehead to the nape of my neck, known to many as "corn rows.

Minutes later, while walking across the intersection of Manhattan Street and Anderson Avenue, I was heckled by onlookers. This would become a common experience in the weeks to come, as my looks clashed with a number of people's ideals.

After being confronted by friends who wouldn't touch my hair, being told that I must hear a different beat, being snickered at, questioned and prodded, it became evident that many people are uncomfortable when someone moves outside of his or her "cultural space." A number of my friends liked my somebody pulled the plug, and 1 braids, but most were uneasy with them. I was no longer in my "white-person" space, nor was I part of the African or African-American domain, 1 was somewhere in the middle - straddled between my skin color and my new look.

Originally, I had intended to get my hair braided so that I would be better able to authentically describe the braiding. process for an ethnography I am doing on African student experiences at K-State. But I got much more than I expected. This encounter allowed me to better understand what it's like to travel across the Atlantic to the United States, down I-70 onto the K-State campus and be both an African and a person of color. For most Africans it's like walking into a glass wall that smashes into a million bits, and you're only recourse is to pick up the pieces and try to put them back together the best you can.

The more I listened to the stories of my friends from Burundi, Ghana, Uganda and throughout Africa, the more empathetic I became and the clearer I was able to see how Americans view people. For Africans, being in the United States is like holding up a mirror everyday and not being able to is the most disease-riddled see your reflection. Americans see skin color first and if you're from Africa and you're black. then you have to deal with it. The more I think about this, the more challenging it seems. Imagine coming from a place where the value of skin color is ambiguous and into this new community where historically and presently we categorize people by their skin color, along with their religion, class, gender and sexual orientation.

When recently asked what I learned most about writing this ethnography, I claimed that I had learned a lot about African culture, but really I've learned that African students at K-State know what's up, more than most of my American friends. They talk global politics and economics like experts, sifting out the Madison Avenue globalization "bull" and painting a hardy picture of an exploited world where American corporations use cheap labor to keep our feet covered in new tennis shoes while we watch our TVs, play video games and drink a nice cup of coffee.

I've observed how they skillfully apply flexibility, like rising above ignorance when an evangelist comes to their house and equates them to living and eating with animals, to dealing with coworkers who ask if they live in trees.

They are resilient dealing with controversy through quiet determination when their professor tells them that Africa diverse as Africa itself, inviting white guys like me in and making me a part of their community while confronting my ignorance like a teacher turns a mistake into a teachable moment.

But most of all my experience hanging out with members of the African Student Union has taught me that they are culturally competent in a land of incompetence. They are here to learn, to participate, to contribute, and they do so with resolve. They experience new things every day, yet are unable to return home to share with family and friends for years at a time. They overcome cultural and language barriers while maneuvering the American color line.

As I sit and reflect on what I've learned, I realize that the womb is closed and there is no turning back. As I look to my future I realize that either I can attempt to live inside a community where I'm safe or I can explore and learn about people. If I've learned one thing from my African friends, it's that community can be found everywhere.

Proposed budget to affect schools

: The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House Appropriations Committee produced a budget plan Monday night that would close a $206 million funding gap without raising taxes in the fiscal year that starts in July.

But the panel's plan relies on a $4.2 million reduction in a $20.8 million increase promised to universities and community colleges by legislators in 1999, when they reorganized the higher education system.

The full $20.8 million was included in a $9.11 billion spending bill that legislators approved before they recessed April 6 - and that Gov. Bill Graves signed into law earlier Monday. The differences will be worked out after the House and Senate return to the Statehouse on Wednesday.

The House committee's plan makes it unlikely that faculty at the six Regents universities will receive the 6.2 percent raises proposed by Graves. "It's not a painless budget," said Chairman Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing.

"This budget has got a lot of hurt for everyone.

The House plan contained dozens of other changes from the bill Graves signed, many of them cuts in general government spending.

The committee met its goal of not proposing a tax increase, which leaders have insisted wouldn't win House approval anyway. The committee's plan also would step up the collection of delinquent taxes and the Department of Transportation to issue more bonds for highway projects so it wouldn't have to spend tax revenues.

"It's a responsible budget forged under excruciatingly difficult fiscal times," said Rep. Rocky Nichols, Topeka, the committee's ranking Spokesman Don Brown said Graves did not use his authority to veto any individual appropriations. Therefore he and legislators were starting from the same point in trying to resolve budget problems.

"When you look at the magnitude of the budget challenge, certainly the governor is not going to be able to solve the problems with a few strokes of his pen," Brown said.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee finished work Friday on its own budget reconciliation bill, proposing to close the gap partly through more vigorous collection of delinquent taxes and a tax increase for some insurance companies.

The panel recommended $39.5 million in cuts from the spending bill that Graves signed Monday, although it reached that figure partly by disregarding government estimates for social service costs.

In addition, the committee relied on a proposed accounting change to save $20 million. Oil and natural gas producers would be required to pay their severance taxes more quickly to create an early bulge of revenue.

The Senate expects to debate its plan after the Legislature reconvenes Wednesday. The House plans to debate its committee's proposal Graves insists a significant tax increase is needed and has criticized legislators for resorting to proposals like ones in both legislative plans.

"We wanted something that would comfort a child's heart as well as their body," she said.

The guild members used sturdy patterns and machine quilting in hopes the quilts would wear better. The members also made extra quilts so damaged quilts could be replaced. Each quilt came with a homemade

K-State loses 2 close matches against Texas teams

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's tennis team almost had one of its biggest weekends ever - almost. On Saturday at the Washburn Tennis Facility, the No. 42 Cats (11-9, 7-4) narrowly lost to No. 21 Texas A&M, 4-3.

On Sunday, K-State took on No. 14 Texas, which had won 122 of its last 123 matches. Once again, the Cats came close, but dropped the match 4-3.

As a result, the team came away from the weekend with two losses but a moral victory. Or not.

"I think the truth is, we've worked

Eva Novotna' plays tennis Saturday morning against Texas A&M. She lost the first set but won the match for her ninth straight victory.

awfully hard to try to break through to a different level and we haven't done it yet," head coach Steve Bietau said. "I know the players are sick of losing 4-3 to good teams.

"I like our players' response - I don't see them acting happy to get close. I see them more and more reflecting unhappiness with the fact that we haven't taken the next step yet."

No. 1 singles player, junior Alena Jecminkova agreed the team is working under different expectations than in the

"Before, if we lost to a good team, we'd be like, 'Yeah, we lost 4-3,' but now we've lost so many matches 4-3 that it's not fun anymore," she said.

The Cats will have little time to improve, though, as the Big 12 Championship begins Thursday. In that short time frame the players will concentrate on playing like they know they are capable, instead of making adjustments.

"We know what to do on the court," Jecminkova said after Sunday's loss. "There's not too much to - I mean, there is a lot to improve - but there's just consistency.

"We have to play consistent. We have matches where we play good, but then the next day we have bad matches. I personally didn't play good at all in

The play of No. 1 doubles with Jecminkova and senior Eva Novotna' was indicative of the Cats' struggles in all four of their conference losses -K-State lost the doubles point in every

"We didn't play that well at No. 1 doubles. We made some sloppy volleying errors and cost ourselves a couple service games that made that match more difficult than it needed to be, so that's an area we can improve," Bietau said. "Twos played a little bit better today, but they've really struggled

"That's another place where we can get something going before the conference tournament."

Singles play left Bietau little to complain about, though. No. 93 Jecminkova defeated No. 32 Vladka Uhlirova 6-3, 6-2, and sophomore Petra Sedlmajerova knocked off No. 21 Janet Walker 6-3, 7-5 at No. 2 singles.

"I think we competed well today," Bietau said. "We definitely put ourselves in a position where winning the match was a realistic possibility.

"As their coach and seeing the kind of progress that they've made, knowing that they put themselves in the position to win every time we walk on the court, I do feel good about that."

Cats compete at grand final in Oak Ridge, Tenn.

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Varsity 8+ crew placed third out of 25 boats in Sunday's Grand Final of the Southern Intercollegiate Rowing Regatta in Oak Ridge, Tenn. The boat of Mo McGrath, Samantha Allen, Lara Schrock, Carissa Land, Missy Darnell, Josie McClellan, Katy Bockelman, Kelli White and Glenna Yokum finished with a time of 7:08.94 in the finals, bettering all but Clemson and

"This weekend was the first time as a boat they put everything together," head coach Jenny Hale said. "In the final, we set some very specific goals. We wanted to be much more assertive and aggressive in the first part of the race.

"The rowers did exactly that." Meanwhile, Alyssa Adams and Katie Baxter returned from injuries to help the Second Varsity 8+ squad take third in Sunday's Petite Final, posting a time of 7:21.37.

"They certainly improved," Hale said Sunday. "Any time we see growth from race to race, that helps. They found a much better rhythm than they did yesterday. They have got the speed to be in the Grand Final, but they are going to have to learn to push a little bit

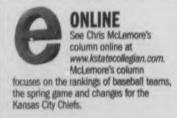

K-State's Novice 8+ boat also placed fourth in Sunday's Petite Final, rowing a time of 7:35.7.

Although they didn't hit their goal this weekend, head novice coach Kevin Harris said the novices will be ready for the Big 12 Invitational next weekend.

"The novices picked up some speed, and they are pushing to get themselves to that next level," Harris said.

Concurrently, the Second Novices were scheduled to compete at the Midwest Rowing Championships in Madison, Wis., this weekend as well. The Open 4+ boat placed fourth in its heat with a time of 7:48.3, qualifying for the Petite Final, but it was canceled due to dangerous weather condi-

Cats compete at KU relays

■ Track team members face Olympic-caliber competitors.

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian

As K-State triple jumper C.J. Jamison was getting ready to jump Saturday, he had a nervous, yet excited feeling about day four of the Kansas Relays competition. The thought of competing against college-level competition was multiplied by the added pressure of squaring off against Olympic-caliber athletes featured at the

The relays were billed as the return of the Olympic Athletes and featured triple jumper Melvin Lister, who competed in Jamison's event - a challenge that Jamison said was one he eagerly anticipated.

"It is awesome," he said. "I am out here competing against the best athletes in the world, and it is a good opportunity to test my ability."

Early in the triple jump, Jamison had tied his personal record. He would have broken that mark by two feet on another attempt but scratched instead. Jamison, who was ducking out of the rain Saturday, said his performance was encouraging. He said he hoped his 10th place finish will propel him in the season.

"I am confident that this will help me to improve at conference in a couple of weeks," Jamison said.

Some athletes were looking to get back into the lanes of competition. One such athlete was Jason Green, sophomore sprinter, who was returning from a twoweek layoff.

"I haven't ran in two weeks and was able to nearly set a PR," he said. "It is good and shows me where I am at."

The Cats were one of 53 women's programs and 69 men's programs in the meet, and the K-State track team pulled its Wildcat weight in the field of competition.

Anna Wetterhus, Sarah James and Joseph Lee all set career bests leading the way on Saturday. Wetterhus did so in the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:36.37, James placed third in the pole vault with a mark of 11 feet, 53/4 inches, and Lee was second in the 800 meters with a time of 1:49.39.

K-State won two relay events as the women's distance medley relay team of Amy Mortimer, Amanda Crouse, Nicole Grose and Korene Hinds won the women's distance medley in a time of 11:34.08, and, in the same event, the men' team of Jean-Paul Niyongabo, Matt Davis, Istvan Nagy and Shadrack Kimeli won with a time of

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said the relays were a valuable step in the

"The fact that we have had so many people contributing - that has been one of the most important things," Rovelto said.

The Cats also received a strong effort from Teena Clincy, who placed second with a time of 13.90.

The Kansas Relays also were an event of personal bests for Shauna Burrell and Josh Mohr, Burrell ran a career-best 4:54.09 to finish sixth in the 1,500 meters, and Mohr ran 1:57.10 to finish ninth in the 800

Ragean Hill, who ran in the sprint medley, said the relays were indicative of what the team needs to work on in preparation for the end of the season.

"It was a meet that gave us a good idea of what we need to work on," Hill said.

That work will continue as the Drake Relays approach this week and the Big 12 Championships near.

KELLY GLASSCOCK/Collegian

K-State's Jim Gruenbacher competes in the pole vault event last Saturday during the annual KU Relays in Lawrence. The meet lasted from Wednesday to Saturday of last week. The relays were billed as the return of the Olympic athletes.

WHO: George Stavropoulos, freshman in theater performance

George Stavropoulos plays the part of Captain Brice in "Arcadia," which opened last weekend and ntinues this weekend at Nichols

Involved in theater since he was 5 years old, Stavropoulos said his acting abilities began to take shape in high school after a drama teacher told him he should try out for a play. After finding out how much he enjoyed acting, Stavropoulos said he

"Arcadia" has been a huge challenge, which just makes it e appealing for an actor, he said. Stavropoulos said director Charlotte MacFarland had the cast study the play for a couple of weeks before rehearsing the script.

"Our job as actors is to convey meanings within the script to the audience," he said. "We may have studied it for months but the audience only has a few seconds between lines to pick up the intricacies of the play."

'Humpty' Party

Digital Underground to perform tonight at Silverado

Kansas State Collegian

When Digital Underground released "Sex Packets" in 1990, they revolutionized the way hip-hop was done.

Finally, a hip-hop act was more concerned with making sure people had fun than sustaining a hardcore bad-boy image.

With hit singles such as "The Humpty Dance" and "Same Song," Digital Underground has made a name for itself, and tonight the group's tour will place them at Silverado

One of the founding members of the group. Money B., said college crowds often make for fun shows. "The college audience is usually more openminded and free-spirited about everything, so they have plenty of fun at the shows," he said. "It always surprises me how many college kids know our stuff when it came out when a lot of them were in middle school or even grade school. Digital Underground's touring act consists of seven people, three of whom make up the opening act, Element. Money B. said Digital Underground's live performance is a blend of all of the band's five studio albums and will keep the audience into

Since most of the shows in Manhattan are rock 'n' roll, promoter Jeff Bilberry, senior in advertising, said the hip-hop act will be something new for Manhattan music fans.

"I'm honestly excited about getting a hiphop group through here," he said. "It will be different because I'm a rock guy, and it will be fun seeing Digital Underground, one of the truly original groups in hip-hop, perform." With so few hip-hop acts coming through Manhattan, the group hopefully will serve as a catalyst in getting more such acts in the city, said C.J. Wadsworth, also known as "Big Daddy Bocephus" from the Urban Show on KSDB-FM

Wadsworth, junior in sociology, said he thinks people will want to see more such acts in the future because of this show.

"Digital Underground is a perfect first act to get in here for hip-hop because they will be a good group to break the ice in Manhattan and bring people into this type of show," he said. "People seem excited about this show, and I could see it having a better turn out than even the 2 Skinnee Is show earlier this

> With local performers under Punt Records appearing as the opening act, > > Wadsworth said the show will also bring recognition to local talent in the genre that most people aren't aware of. Opening for Digital Underground has DZALE, a Punt Records artist, excited, and he said other performers appearing under Punt Records include Ivy, Little Weazal, Insight, Young P and Dilly.

DZALE

said he'd like to pick up some of the showmanship from the notoriously wild Digital Underground live show. After all, the sound has influenced DZALE's work in some ways, he said.

or at the door.

"I like the album 'Sex Packets,' and I like Shock-G's work," he said. "Growing up I would listen to Digital Underground all the time, and it was the bomb, and it still is.

The influence of Digital Underground is deep, and Wadsworth pointed out the pioneering qualities of their work.

Often, artists such as Dr. Dre are credited for bringing a P-funk (Parliament Funkadelic) style into rap, but Digital Underground was fusing the sounds long before anyone else, Wadsworth Besides pioneering new sounds, Wadsworth said Digital Underground was the first to put on a big-stage show with a sense of humor, with Shock-G becoming Humpty Hump and switching back on stage.

"He was the first to bring a complete alternate persona to hip-hop," he said.

"There had been performers like (David Bowie's) Ziggy Stardust before in rock music, but no one had ever done that in hip-hop. He puts on the glasses and the hat and becomes a different person. He even sounds different.

This show will be the last of KMKF-FM 101.5's Three-Way concert series, after the Phunk Junkeez show and the Urge show that took place earlier this month.

Wadsworth, who has seen two Digital Underground shows, said the shows are fun above all else.

Money B. ready for fun show in Manhattan

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

Money B. helped to found one of the most seminal hip-hop groups of the early '90s, Digital Underground. Digital Underground's current tour will bring them to Manhattan tonight at Silverado Saloon. Here is what Money B. had to say about a Digital Underground live performance.

Collegian: What can people expect out of a Digital Underground show?

Money B.: Well, basically, we get onstage and party with the people. For anyone who hasn't seen a Digital Underground show, it's the most interactive show you'll ever go to.

We have fun with the audience. Sometimes we'll bring guest emcees up onstage or a few ladies. We just party with the crowd. We're not really set in what we're gonna do that night. It's more what we feel like doing. It's organized mayhem, in a way. You just Collegian: When people leave the show, what do you want them to think about it? Money B.: I want them to say that was one of the best parties they've ever been to. I don't even want them to think of it like a concert. When they leave, they can say they partied with Humpty Hump and Clee and Money B. and the rest of us.

Collegian: What do you like about performing at a show?

Money B.: I like to see people havin' a good time. If the crowd is live and they vibe off us, then we're gonna vibe off them. It's great to see people singin' along, throwin' their hands in the air and havin' a drink with us.

Collegian: What do you want people to notice about the performance?

Money B.: I want people to take notice of the fact that we've mastered our craft. I mean, our D.J., Dialec, is on point, and the rest of us have been doin' this a long time, and we've got it

Collegian: How do you think Digital Underground has influenced hip-hop? Money B.: I think we've broadened hip-hop. When we came out, hip-hop was all the same. Everyone was tryin' to be hard-core and show how tough they were. We came along, and I think we made it okay to have a sense of humor in our music and dress funny and act funny onstage. We were one of the first groups to let it hang out and not just talk about how cool we are. We're doing what we like and havin' fun with it. Now others are, too, and I think we contributed to that.

Collegian: What do you enjoy about the shows?

Money B.: When I see people havin' fun and they come up after the show and say how much they liked the show. it lets me know what I've been doin' for the past 10 years is all worth it.

U.S. not to sell Taiwan destroyers

By RON FOURNIER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON D.C. - Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has recommended against the United States selling Taiwan high-tech destroyers equipped with the Aegis combat radar system, and President Bush is expected to accept the advice, officials said Monday.

Two government officials. speaking on condition of anonymity, said Rumsfeld has instead recommended that Taiwan get four Kidd-class destroyers. Those vessels have a much less potent ship-borne radar system but would still be a step forward for Taiwan's Navy.

It is Bush's first major decision involving China since the country detained 24 U.S. airmen for 11 days after the collision of a U.S. surveillance plane and a Chinese fighter jet over the South China Sea.

Beijing fears the high technology eventually could serve as a platform for a regional missile that would provide a shield for -Talwan against China's growing arsenal of short-range ballistic missiles

China considers Taiwan a breakaway province that must be reunited with the mainland. The Taiwan Relations Act, enacted in 1979, calls for the United States to provide Taiwan with such defense articles and defense services ... as may be necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability.

Key lawmakers were expected to be notified late Monday, and Taiwan would be given formal notification of Bush's decision Tuesday, officials said.

Sen. Craig Thomas, R-Wyo., who chairs the Senate Foreign Relations' East Asian and Pacific panel and was briefed on Bush's decision, said the proposed arms sales to Taiwan "will be a robust package, I believe, But I don't think they're going to go all out to try to make the tension higher."

One source said Rumsfeld's recommendation included several other defense systems besides the four Kidd-class destroyers. He would not say what they were.

Taiwan wants to buy other major weapons, including dieselpowered submarines, the new PAC 3 version of the Patriot air defense missile, M1 tanks, P-3 submarinehunting planes and IDAMS satellite-guided bombs.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer played down any implications for strained U.S.-China relations, calling the Taiwan decision an annual event and insisting that China's recent deten tion of an American spy plane crew will not be the sole factor in making the decision.

"Of course, the president's going to consider all factors that go into Taiwan's defense needs," Fleischer

Earlier, Bush told reporters his decision soon would be announced.

"You'll find out when I make my decision clear," the president said. "I haven't made it clear yet. We'll let you know soon."

Rumsfeld is scheduled to relay Bush's decision to a visiting Taiwanese delegation Tuesday after notifying senior members of Congress

Taiwan had asked for permission to buy warships equipped with the sophisticated Aegis radar

Kidd-class destroyers are no longer in use in the U.S. Navy. Adm. Dennis Blair, the commander of U.S. Pacific Command, told Congress last month that the Kiddclass destroyers have plenty of useful life yet.

At the State Department, spokesman Richard Boucher said the arms sale decision would not be influenced by recent problems with China, including China's continued detention of the U.S. surveillance explained his actions to the officers. It was not clear if Waddle would receive his pension, although Gittins has said in the past that he would keep full retirement pay. "Admiral Fargo thoughtfully considered Commander Waddle's presentation and decided, nonetheless, that punishment should be imposed under the preponderance of the evidence standard applicable to such hearings," Gittins said. Gittins said Fargo indicated he would accept Waddle's forced retirement. If he had chosen not to retire, he would have had to explain why he should be allowed to remain in the Gittins said the admiral told Waddle he was proud of his decision to testify before a court of inquiry without immunity.

"My heart aches for the losses suffered by the families of those killed aboard the M/V Ehime Maru and the grief that this accident unfairly has thrust upon them," Waddle said, apologizing once again for the collision and urging U.S. government settlement of claims made by the families.

"I think about those lost at sea every day, and I grieve for the families.

Waddle has said he plans to travel to Japan to meet with the families of the victims. He previously apologized and accepted responsibility for the collision.

Navy officials have acknowledged that the surfacing demonstration during which the collision occurred was done only for the benefit of 16 civilians aboard, three of whom were seated at the sub's controls at the

Waddle, in an interview with "Dateline NBC" taped before the hearing, described the shock he felt upon seeing the words "high school" through a periscope seconds after

"Those were the first words that I read, and I thought, 'Oh my God, we've hit ... we've hit some kids."

He said the Greeneville spent about 80 seconds at periscope depth before the surfacing.

In hindsight, he said, that was not long enough.

The hearing was conducted under Article 15 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Waddle could have faced other disciplinary action including fines and critical performance letters.

Residents complain duplexes lower home values story by Kristen Dymacek ■ photos by Mike Shepherd

Mike Lesperance of Excel Building carries plywood onto the roof of a super duplex being built at 1324 Colorado St. Lesperance said some residents are afraid of college students moving in but said he doesn't understand why. "Near as I can tell, these kids are just here to go to school and want a nice place to live," he said.

With hammer in hand, Mike Lesperance walks along the roof of the super duplex being built at 1324 Colorado St. Lesperance and his son, Sean, are contracted to do the framing and some of the finish work on the duplex.

A completed super duplex already is occupied at 1322 Colorado St., with another going up right next door.

Super duplex criteria

The Manhattan City Commission passed the first reading of an ordinance April 17 regarding conditional use on R-2 (residential two-family) and R-M (residential maximum

Super duplex plans would apply to any single-family attached or two-story family dwelling that has two or more habitable stories, completely or partially above ground, and is equal to at least 30 percent lot coverage

It also must meet two of the following

One or both units have no attached garage. Off-street parking is proposed for both in front of and behind the structure.

- The entire structure is on one lot. - The plan must be presented to the zoning board of appeals for approval before being issued a permit and before building.

Concerns lead to ordinance's approval

isti LeMoine didn't think she already would be secondguessing her decision to purchase her Manhattan home 18 months ago.

But with the building of several super duplexes in the residential areas south of K-State, LeMoine said she's not sure if her family settled in the right neighborhood.

"We're kind of holding off on improvements like remodeling, siding and renovating the kitchen," she said. "We just don't know how the super duplexes will affect the resale of our

The super duplexes, which have caused much controversy between builders and Manhattan residents, are built with two floors and four bedrooms on each side of the duplex.

"They are so enormous that they take away from the character in the neighborhood," LeMoine said.

The concerns about the super duplexes include increased traffic and how they fit into the neighborhood aesthetically, she said.

The much-debated duplex discussion led to a approval of a conditional-use ordinance by the Manhattan City Commission. The new ordinance is made up of restrictions that require plans for the super duplexes to be presented to the Zoning Board of Appeals for approval. Manhattan landlord Ron Ford said he believes this ordinance will drastically cut down on the number of super duplexes being built, which, in turn, will decrease the amount of new student housing available.

"This ordinance is not going to make things better for the student," he said. "You're going to see a 50-percent decrease in new student housing."

According to the city's July 2000 housing study, there are 12 large apartment complexes that house 1,850 units.

Road plans cut due to economy

By SHANNON MARSHALL Kansas State Collegian

State budget cuts due to a receni downturn in the economy will affect the Kansas Department of Transportation's Comprehensive Transportation Program, a KDOT official said Monday.

An estimated $274 million deficit is looming before the state, which would result in a blow to projected road improvement plans. Marty Matthews, KDOT public information officer, said the deficit means a cut of 85 to 100 state projects to the state highway system.

"Our next step is to sit down and look at all of the projects and see what we can do with the money that we have," he said.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics, said it is tax collection within the state that has caused the deficit in the economy. He predicted the deficit wouldn't dramatically affect state transportation

"I hope that tax collections pick up, but I don't think it's enough to substantially reduce the amount of projects they're going to do," he said. "However, if the tax collections continue to lag behind, there could be a greater effect.

The Comprehensive Transportation Program was passed by the Legislature in 1999 and was slated to last until 2008.

The CTP includes three categories of projects: major modifications/priority bridges, which include additions to Interstate 70 and repairs to state bridges; system enhancement projects, which

Commission reviews goals for this year

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

In a slightly cozier Tuesday night meeting than usual, an altered Manhatian City Commission looked at the future.

Seated at a smaller folding table in the center of the meeting room instead of their typical desks at the far end, commissioners reviewed 2001 goals drawn up last December. With newly elected commissioners Brad Everett and Mark Taussig, some issues sparked more discussion than others. The list, compiled in no special order by December's commission, mentioned housing, redevelopment, code enforcement, infrastructure and utilities, to name a few areas.

While sections like the Manhattan Regional Airport were observed with minimal discussion, ones like codes and housing proved to be hot topics.

Taussig said zoning changes that might limit controversial super duplexes process too The issue was one that made up the majority of the debate of last week's commission meeting.

"Forgive me for sounding impatient, but there are some things we shouldn't wait that long," he said.

On another housing discussion, Everett said he still opposes a proposed mandatory rental

Republicans, Democrats differ on how to finance education

By GREG TOPPO The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Money could be the deal breaker when the Senate takes up a compromise education bill that would give states more freedom in deciding how to spend federal funds.

Democrats want to provide about $30 billion for elementary and secondary education next year - about $13 billion more than this year. President Bush wants a much smaller increase of about $1.4 billion, proposing to spend about $18.6 billion total. The Senate committee that wrote the bill proposed similar spending levels to what

Congressional and White House negotiators have labored for weeks on the basics of a compromise, but admit their budget figures still are far apart. So Democrats are threatening to introduce a handful of narrowly prescribed programs - money targeted for teacher training, smaller class size and school repairs, for instance unless Republicans commit to more money.

"It's almost a prenuptial agreement," said Ed Kealy of the Committee for Education Funding, a nonpartisan group that lobbies for higher federal education spending. "They want to see that the resources are going to be there up front before they sign off."

Republicans agree that funding levels could change the shape of the education package, set for debate later this week.

"There was an understanding that if we reached an agreement on money, there would be an attempt on both sides to keep the bill reasonably clean," said Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., a member of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee.

The political implications are huge. Bush has made education a priority, both on the campaign trail and in the White House.

As he introduced the 2001 National Teacher of the Year at the White House on Monday, Bush said his education plan strikes a balance between spending and accountability. "I support historic new levels of education funding, yet all of us know better schools require more than just funding," he said. "And I hope the Senate hears that we need meaningful education reform by high standards - accountability."

Aides distributed charts to reporters showing that while spending on education has climbed steadily in the past 15 years, national standardized test scores have remained flat.

Most of what Bush wants is included in the bipartisan Senate bill: a $5 billion, five-year commitment to teaching every child to read by third grade; annual student testing in math and reading in grades 3 through 8; rewards for schools that perform well and sanctions for those that don't.

Gregg abandoned efforts to attach to the Senate bill a provision that would force failing schools to give poor students a $1,500 voucher for private school. He said he'll introduce a voucher amendment on the Senate floor. Democrats say the allowances would drain money from struggling schools and they stand almost no chance of approval in the Senate, which is divided 50-50 between the two

Even Bush's setback on vouchers could turn out to be a qualified success. Congress and the White House have agreed tentatively to an alternative proposal by which persistently failing schools would have to give students the option of using some federal money for public or private tutoring. As a last resort, a failing school would be reopened as a charter school with a new staff and curriculum.

The ideas have been championed by centrist Democrats, including Sen. Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., the ranking Democrat on the Education Committee, said last week that he was optimistic that lawmakers and the White House could work out funding disagreements, but said the two sides remained billions of dollars apart on how much money education should get.

"It's nonsense to think that we can reform our schools on the cheap," he said.

Restoration of Statehouse scheduled to start in fall

TOPEKA - Crews will begin work on the "People's Building" this fall, starting an eight-year project to restore the Statehouse to its former luster and grandeur.

The $133 million project is expected to begin in September or October with construction of a 561car parking garage beneath the north

Secretary of Administration Dan Stanley said the $13 million garage was added to improve access and aesthetics of the 134-year-old structure

"The grounds of the Capitol really look like a Kmart parking lot," Stanley said, referring to the parked cars that ring the building on a typical day.

Senate President Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, who chairs the restoration committee, said the project would improve access for visitors and legislators by expanding parking, meeting rooms and legislative offices.

Also in the plans are a visitors center on the north side of the Statehouse, with access from a circular drive.

Bill Groth, the Statehouse architect overseeing the renovation, said visitors would enter the building at what is now the basement level. A labyrinth of storage rooms and utility pipes will be replaced with lighted classrooms, a cafeteria and offices.

In addition, an underground walkway will be constructed around the Statehouse between its foundation and a corridor of new offices for legislative support staff and media, Groth said.

The area will be marked by skylights in the walkway's ceiling to illuminate the basement and give an interesting view of the dome.

"We will really be introducing a lot of light into that area with the skylights," Groth said.

While adding new features, crews also will give attention to the Statehouse's brittle limestone exterior.

Throughout the building, specialists have peeled layers of paint to reveal original wall details. The paint schemes and stencilings will be restored, returning the Statehouse to its 1917 appearance, the last time an extensive renovation was done.

Legislators agree the work is "Over the years, it has deteriorated," said Rep. Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and a member of the restoration commission. "It is time we respect what our forefathers did for us and restore it to its original majesty."

To finance the first phase of the project, the state will issue $40 million in bonds, to be repaid with the interest on unclaimed money invested by the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System.

Astronauts connect power to station's robot arms

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - For the second time this week, two space shuttle astronauts floated outside Tuesday and booked up cables that sent power coursing through the international space station's new 58foot robot arm.

To NASA's relief, Endeavour spacewalkers Scott Parazynski and Chris Hadfield managed to get both power lines working, after slaving over cable connections.

"Hip, hip, hooray," the spacewalkers cheered when the backup power line came to life. Applause filled the mom at Mission Control.

Only one power routing is needed to operate the robot arm, a billiondollar, two-handed construction crane that is needed to finish building the space station. But NASA wanted both lines up and running in case one failed.

- The Associated Press

Space station managers agree to allow tourist visit

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Managers of the International Space Station agreed on Tuesday to allow an American millionaire to visit the orbiting laboratory as a tourist. despite concerns about the safety of having a lesser-trained nonprofessional on board.

Dennis Tito, an aerospace engineer-turned-financier who paid the Russians $20 million to fly into space, will be launched April 28 to the space station aboard a Russian craft and then spend six days aboard the orbiting laboratory, officials said.

NASA had strenuously objected to the Russians independently selling a space station trip to Tito, but, in the end, agreed to allow the voyage as an exception to regulations still being formulated.

The international partners in the space station, the U.S., Japan. Canada, Russia and the European Space Agency, agreed to the Tito visit in an agreement signed Tuesday.

Program teaches use of drama as therapy

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

It isn't a coincidence that Karen Johnson transferred to K-State to complete her bachelor's degree in theater. Although she could receive that degree at almost any university, she chose K-State.

She was interested in an emphasis on drama therapy, and K-State is one of the few universities in America that provides such a program.

Drama therapy is a relatively young field. In the simplest form, Sally Bailey, assistant professor of theater, said drama therapy uses action and drama techniques to achieve therapeutic goals.

The goal is to have people work through their problems by roleplaying, acting and other drama techniques.

Johnson, junior in theater with an emphasis in drama therapy, said she always has been interested in theater

She discovered that although she enjoyed performing, it wasn't what she wanted to pursue as a career. "I wanted to use drama and theater to help people," Johnson said. "I discovered that drama therapy existed to do just that, and I was sold on it."

Johnson completed her associates degree at a community college and began her search for a university that offered a drama therapy concentration. She found K-State.

Nadya Trytan, graduate student in theater, also came to K-State to work within the drama therapy concentration. She said it happened fast, but when she found the program at K-State, she was sure it was what she needed to accomplish her career goals.

"I've always been interested in using theater to help kids get in touch with themselves and express who they are," Trytan said.

"I felt that drama therapy was the best way to accomplish this goal."

Trytan is an intern at a school in Lawrence in a therapeutic classroom. She said the class is designed for teen-agers who haven't been successful in school for various reasons, including behavior problems and mental illness.

"It's been so empowering to be able to use what interests me to help people heal," Trytan said.

"I couldn't be happier. I discovered such a wonderful program here."

Bailey said K-State is only one of two universities that offers drama therapy courses to undergraduates. There are three other universities that offer these courses to graduate students.

"In a way, K-State has been very pioneering in deciding this was a program that would be important to offer," Bailey said. "It's such a young field, but there are more and more people becoming interested in it."

Bailey said there are about five undergraduate students at K-State emphasizing in drama therapy and about 15 graduate students.

"It's so hard to say how many students we have," Bailey said. "These are students who are just into drama therapy, but we have several others in other areas who take the courses to help them with their work."

Drama therapy is used mostly with groups but also can be successful with couples or individuals. Bailey said success with such therapy has been seen in schools,

"There are so many job opportunities in this field," Bailey said. "Many places are trying to incorporate drama therapy with something else — whatever it is they do. It has seen great success."

Snake roundups stir controversy

By COLLEEN FOOTE Kansas State Collegian

Rattlesnakes are bringing a community together and causing others to fight. Rattlesnake roundups, an annual event for many communities, consists of people hunting rattlesnakes.

Recently, K-State has received complaints from alumni and animal rights activists because the university is supporting a rattlesnake roundup through the PRIDE program.

PRIDE is a statewide community development program that helps communities identify needs, assess resources and develop a plan to complete projects or provide services. The program has helped Sharon Springs, Kan., by using its annual rattlesnake roundup to help promote the community's tourism.

Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he understands the controversy but said it should not reflect upon K-State

"Our goal through the PRIDE program is to help communities improve," Johnson said. "It is not our policy to tell communities what to do and what not to do."

Some animal rights activists believe rattlesnake roundups promote negative stereotypes about rattlesnakes and misinform about ecological issues.

James Carpenter, director of exotic wildlife and zoo animal medicine at K-State, attended a rattlesnake roundup in Oklahoma. "I found it to be unethical and inhumane," Carpenter said.

"The way the hunters handle the rattlesnakes is dangerous to both the person and the rattlesnake."

Carpenter said he thinks even though rattlesnake roundups have occurred for decades, most people's standards have evolved to view the roundups as unnecessary and unethical.

The rattlesnake roundup is the only thing the town of Sharon Springs knew they could do to promote tourism, said Meg Walker, rattlesnake roundup committee member and Sharon Springs resident.

"It does a good job and a good thing for the area," Walker said. "We get people from over 15 states and from countries such as Australia and Germany."

The event is one of the ways the community pulls together, she said.

"The restaurants are busy. The motels are full," Walker said. "It just really helps our community to stay active."

lerry laax, vice provost for K-State's research compliance, said there he thinks there are no right or wrong answer to rattlesnake roundups,

"The situation boils down to if it's not illegal, then it comes to a person's ethical basis," Jaax said.
"The fact that it is legal makes it a personal preference.

"It's hard to say the best way to go. Some people believe rodeos are wrong or it's bad to kill cockroaches," Jaax said. "Just do what you feel is right."

House, governor debate solution to budget crunch

By JOHN HANNA

The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee has finished work on its plan to close a $206 million budget gap, but Gov. Bill Graves believes legislators are headed toward an unacceptable solution.

The House committee's budget reconciles spending with expected revenues without increasing taxes for the state's 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1, Graves has insisted a tax increase is necessary.

The governor told the Lawrence Rotary Club on Monday that he is prepared to veto what he considers quick-fix, short-term budget solutions. The committee finished its work hours later.

"I am certainly reserving the use of a veto as a mechanism to drive home the point," Graves said. But House Speaker Kent

Glasscock wasn't concerned

"Obviously, we would have to come back and deal with that," Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said.

Glasscock and other House members expected their plan to face criticism, particularly because it makes a $4.2 million reduction in a $20.8 million increase promised to universities and community colleges by legislators in 1999, when they reorganized the higher education system.

I originally planned to write about growing up and getting older in this week's column, but I changed my mind once I started talking to my roommate Sunday night. parties? No matter how I answer this question, people are going to disagree. In this age of fairness and equality, I think women should pay for their alcohol. The least we can do is offer to pay for our drinks. If the guy says you don't need to worry about paying, that's fine. We shouldn't think that simply being female entitles us free alcohol. However, my roommate thinks women should get a discount at parties because, in most cases, women aren't going to consume as much alcohol as the average guy. Etiquette issue No. 2: Should a guy pour the drink or pump the tap on the keg for a woman? If the guy is willing to hold the door open for the woman when she walks into the party, he also should be willing to get her a beer before he gets his. "Ladies first" always is a nice gesture in any situation.

Etiquette issue No. 3: Respect for the party house. Remember learning the golden rule in grade school? Well, you shouldn't trash your host's house or steal his or her belongings unless you want the same thing done to you at your next party. After all, these people are being courteous enough to invite you into their homes for a social gathering. You should try to act halfway civilized. Etiquette > issue No. 4: My roommate calls this one the digit dilemma. Should you ask for someone's phone number or give yours out if you don't want to talk to that person ever again? I would have to say no to this one. It's rude to tell someone you're going to call them when you never plan on speaking to them again. All you're doing is leading them on and giving them false hope. Likewise, vou shouldn't give out your phone number to someone if you plan on entering their number into your cell phone as "Stalker" so you won't have to answer their calls when their name shows up on caller ID.

Etiquette issue No. 5: Introduction amnesia. If someone comes up to you at a party and claims to know you and you don't have a clue as to who they are, don't play along. Sure, it can be funny sometimes, but it's not very nice. Politely ask where and when it was that you met him or her. By using this tactic, at least you'll know who they are the next time they come up to you at a party and hug you like they're your long lost friend.

Etiquette issue No. 6: Bathroom manners, Guys, if you're throwing a party, for the love, make sure you are wellstocked in the toilet paper department if you want women to attend your social gathering. And women, don't primp in front of the mirror if the line for the bathroom stretches out the front

Etiquette issue No. 7: Smoking. Don't light up in someone else's house unless you know smoking indoors is acceptable. Even if it is, you might want to consider going outside for the sake of all the nonsmokers in the house. When you do go outside to smoke, don't stand clustered right around the door so that everyone leaving or entering the party has to walk through the death cloud spewing from your

The actual list we compiled was a little bit longer than this one, but my roommate and I felt these were the most needed etiquette refreshers. I think most of us have broken these etiquette rules at one party or another, but now would be a great time to try to remember to party with a little more class.

Many times, men use this goal as a means of attracting women like that." This is not to say that the women here do not have their own obsessions in this world of gods and goddesses. I get up from the bench and head over to the water fountain. It is hard to miss all the women on the cardiovascular machines. Their objective is the polar opposite of the men, finding their deliverance by burning calories to lose pounds through running, stair stepping, and climbing their way to the station of goddess in their own minds. They have committed their lives to showing their ultural signals give rise to image obsession adaptation to a culture that tells women that thin is the ultimate visual sign of conformity and excellence for a woman in our society. But men certainly don't mind this aspect of the Rec. Culture. Bob, a weight lifter at the Rec, said, "Usually, when there are a lot of hot ladies there, it makes me more motivated to get my weight up so I don't look like a pansy. There are some goons up there, but there's a lot of hot women, too.'

> I gradually traverse the distance back to the weight room and look at the men staring at themselves and each other in the mirror, while the women step on the scale, a sense of pride in their eyes as they compare their weight to that of the other women here. This intragender competition is present everywhere at the Rec, a world of cultural struggle on steroids. I finish up my two-hour workout and begin my travel home, my daily oblations to this sanctuary completed. This work is not for the purpose of saying that everyone who comes to this place is after the same specific goals that have been discussed here, but they all are on a quest set forth by the American cultural obsession. Each and every day we are confronted with the images of what we are told to be: through advertising, through the looks we receive from our fellow men and women, and the images of sexuality presented in the media. But we have to deal with the ambiguity of what we, as males and females in American culture, have to look like to live in this world. The Rec Complex is our salvation, a place where we can become the icons of our culture, demonstrating through our bodies the manifestation of America's obsession. I was the only person in our class who chose a culture for my ethnography in which I was an integral part, and in so doing question my own participation in this way of life. I had the opportunity to look in the mirror and see the truth behind the image of pain I put forth every day. I know now that as I travel to this place to work out, performing my Sunday meditation in my pilgrimage to the temple of the gods, I do so armed with the knowledge of my culture in hand.

Publicity, involvement key to improve series

Here is a recapitulation of my day as a graduate student at K-State. This is presented as critique and not necessarily criti-

As I was drinking my morning coffee in the K-State Student Union, I noticed there were some very distinguished-looking people entering the Little Theatre. As I approached, I noticed that this was the opening day for the Eisenhower symposium, part of which was at the university (1 should have noticed that something was occurring as I pulled in to the southern parking lot, adjacent to the Memorial Stadium and half of the student parking ("O") was roped off and inaccessible to students. It would be unthinkable to void the parking meters for the day and let distinguished guests park in front of the Union).

As I inquired about the day's events concerning the symposium, I asked why it had not been advertised more on campus.

The response from a university official was that it was, in fact, posted on many of the kiosks and throughout Waters Hall (after I told him I was a graduate student in political science).

On my way to class, I stopped by no less than four kiosks, none of which had any mention of the symposium, and I covered all three floors of Waters Hall - not a poster in sight! (though I must admit the Stephen Ambrose Landon Lecture Series posters were visible)

In the afternoon, I went to McCain Auditorium to listen to Ambrose's presentation.

After fighting my way to the top balcony, having to compete with two academic deans and their spouses, I found my seat and prepared to enjoy the presentation. At this point, your first question should be "Why were two senior members of the administration fighting for seats in the top balcony when there were more than 25 seats available in the front row?" ... yes, I did count them.

After Ambrose graciously recognized the World War II veterans in the audience, his comments

The only problem at this point was, I couldn't hear most of what he was saying, and I doubt the veterans in front of me, one of whom kept adjusting his hearing aid, could hear any better (Two remotely emplaced, wireless Bose speakers - under $500 - would be a permanent fix that wouldn't overextend the university's operating budget). And now the best part. As I hurried down to the stage at the completion of the presentation, I was told that Ambrose would make a few remarks to the press before coming out from behind the stage. At this point, approximately 15 people had gathered at the stage exit, books in hand, awaiting his appearance.

Among this group again were senior faculty members (in addition to an academic dean), several veterans (some disabled) who graciously had been acknowledged by Ambrose earlier, a few scholars and some students.

Now, let's review the scenario from the university's perspective. You invite one of the most prestigious military historians in the nation, a best-selling author and former professor, to speak at the university, and you don't include 15 minutes in his schedule to sign a few books?

Why not invest a little more effort (not necessarily money, though the sound system in McCain could use some help) and turn a good lecture series into a great lecture series.

If it's intended for the students as well as the local community, let's advertise more on campus. The director of the political science MA program was unaware of the Eisenhower symposium. even though he actively had advertised Ambrose's presentation.

The Collegian even seemed caught off guard, publishing a story on Ambrose the day of his presentation. I, along with 14 other fans of military history and Stephen Ambrose, did not have a good day at K-State.

Fun key to job delivering beer

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

For one Manhattan resident, beer is an everyday thing.

Nate Meseke, route sales representative for Cambell Distributing, delivers beer to all bars and restaurants in Manhattan and to two major grocery stores daily.

"It is an awesome job," Meseke said. "It is a lot of physical work, but it is also a lot of talking to people and being outside. It is stuff I really enjoy."

Not having the typical office job is something Meseke looks for

"Sitting at a desk all day can get boring," he said. "Instead of looking at the clock and saying 'Dang, it's only three,' I look at it and think, 'Damn, it is already three.' Time seems to go fast with my job, and there definitely isn't enough hours to get everything done."

Meseke started his career seven years ago as warehouse help for the Budweiser distributor.

"I gradually just moved up," he said. "I started going on one or two runs a week, and then a fulltime delivery position opened up."

Meseke said he couldn't be happier with his current position.

"It is a great job that I just fell into," he said. "I mean, as a kid, I didn't dream of being a Budweiser route man, but I wouldn't give it up now. It is a lot of Another plus to his job is being able to interact with people, Meseke said.

"I am on a first-name basis with a lot of the customers," he said. "We have established friendships that many jobs wouldn't allow."

Steve Eldred, cook and bartender for Porter's Bar, deals with Meseke two to three times a week during his deliveries to the bar.

"He knows his job well," Eldred said. "He comes in, loads up our cooler and still has time to talk a little. We call him 'Nate the Bud guy' because he is always in a great mood and really acts like he enjoys what he is doing."

D.J. Bruce, bar manager at 12th Street Pub, said he notices the same characteristics in Meseke.

"Nate is probably the most friendly and knowledgeable delivery guy that we have come through here," Bruce said. "He is a real ladies' man and likes to have fun with his job."

Meseke said fun is the key to keeping his job

"The routes can get pretty routine, but usually I can find something interesting to talk about with the customers," he said. "Plus, every time someone drinks a Budweiser product, I know I had a hand in bringing them that beer. That is a reward within

Cats win 5th in row

■ Team beats William Woods despite being outhit; extends longest winning streak of year.

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's baseball team is getting used to being outhit.

For the third time in the last four games, a Wildcat opponent - this time William Woods - found a way to put more numbers in the hit column of the Frank Myers Field scoreboard than the home team did.

Conventional baseball wisdom leads fans to think that type of statistic would equal a long, agonizing stretch of losses - usually, more hits equals a win. Instead, Tuesday afternoon's 12-10 win over the Owls extended K-State's streak to five - its longest winning streak of the year.

"We're scoring runs," head coach Mike Clark said. "Earlier in the season, we were outhitting people and not winning, but we've had timely hits. Josh (Cavender) has done a good job in the RBI position, and we're taking advantage of what the other team is giving us. If they're not going to throw strikes, it's hard to get hits."

William Woods starter Seith Monahan had trouble finding the strike zone early in the game. K-State tallied seven runs off Monahan, though he would surrender just three hits in 1 2/3 innings for the Wildcat starter Wes Vrska ran into trouble as well, and soon both coaches were forced to look elsewhere for stability from the mound.

"We were hoping to get seven innings out of him, so that was a disappointment," Clark said of Vrska. "He didn't have his good stuff.

"He wasn't locating, and they did a good job. When he made mistakes, they

The freshman hurler collected five strikeouts, five earned runs and three walks in three innings of work for the Cats. He also hit three batters before giving way to junior Tyson Helsel in the K-State added two in both the fifth and sixth innings while Helsel kept the Owls to just one during that stretch, and the Cats were up 12-6 heading into the top of the eighth.

"Tyson did a good job. He held the fort," Clark said. "He got a little tired, but I thought he did a good job of stabilizing things in the middle innings, allowing us to get a lead and then hold on at the end. Tyson stepped forward and did some positive things today."

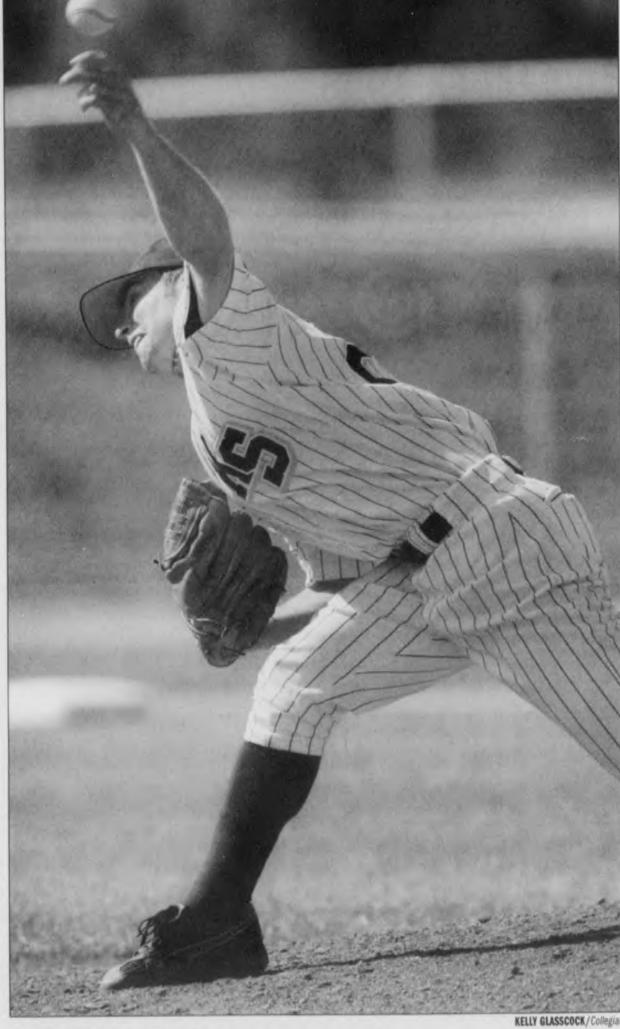

Helsel worked 4 1/3 innings in the game, gaining his second win on the year after stifling the William Woods attack long enough for junior James Brazeal to warm up for his first save opportunity since March 31 against Baylor.

"It was great to see James back on the bump," Clark said. "I thought he threw great, and he looked like the James Brazeal of old.

"It was great to get him in a competitive situation where he had an opportunity to get a save, and it looked like his stuff was pretty good."

Students need to support both baseball, football teams

There's been some questionable activity in Manhattan lately - enough that it could be called a crime. Maybe there's something in the water or the dreaded mad cow disease has taken hold, causing students not to think too clearly.

Let me explain my uneasiness.

The football team had its spring game last weekend, and boy did it look great. We're stacked, we can't be beaten, this is our year. But then again, it was a practice. A practice. And we paid to see it!

Hmmm.

In contrast, K-State's baseball team did a little spring cleaning last weekend when it played one of the best squads in the nation at Frank Myers Field. They didn't wear football helmets or switch back and forth during the game, but what they did do was sweep a team many consider to be a contender in postseason play this summer.

That's right, in a three-game series, the Wildcat baseball team - the one you forgot about, the one whose coach you just call Mike, not "God" - snuck up and took three straight from the defending Pac 10 champion UCLA Bruins - and it was free to see. A gift to you from the friendly folks of the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The Cats didn't just beat the Bruins, either. They embarrassed them. After receiving votes in the latest Baseball Weekly/ESPN poll, thanks in large part to an early-April win over No. 1 Stanford, UCLA suited up for the weekend set with K-State brimming against confi-Then, when it all was said and done, the big. bad Bruins were outhit, outpitched and outplayed, and then they politely were shown the door by the underestimated Cats. Thanks for trying, come again ... buh-bye.

But we missed an opportunity, kids. Yup, I can't decide which was the bigger disappointment - UCLA's lack of skill in the field or the lack of purple pride at the Frank during Friday and Sunday's games. Heads or tails, I guess.

I know this is completely sacrilegious to some of you football fans out there, but here's a hint. There's plenty of action after Bill an' the boys get done in the fall.

We'll approach the argument from another perspective. Let me appeal to your stronger senses.

Think for a minute how much we support our football team in the fall. We tailgate in the parking lot before the games, we wear purple to watch them play, we always party afterwards. And we enjoy this.

> What I can't understand is why we would let the partying end! Spring is tailor-made for slip 'n' slides, collapsible pools and rented hot tubs on the back of school buses.

The parking lots still are open, the weather is even better, purple still is the best color and there's plenty of room inside the stadium to get crazy the same way you do at K-State football games. And did I mention it's free to go?

Lack of excitement at the ol' ballyard, you say? Ask the K-State fan who climbed atop the Bruins dugout Sunday afternoon with a push broom to help the Cats out in their bid for a sweep about excitement, or the guy who spelled out "K-S-U" Williestyle to balance out the lame excuse for a cheer coming from UCLA fans making the trip to the Little Apple to support their

Still, the Bruin fans seemed to be more vocal and more excited during every game with the exception of Saturday's, when almost 3,000 K-State fans on their way home from the spring game decided to make a stop at the Frank to see something

The Cats still have a chance to make it to the Big 12 Tournament this year, and there's plenty more action at Frank Myers Field this season. K-State will be host to Missouri this weekend in a big series that could determine the Cats' chances for the postseason.

There's a big parking lot with an empty football stadium behind it that costs nothing to park in.

A cooler and a grill will fit just as well in the back of your truck in the spring as it does in the fall, and there's even a pregame show on the radio to listen to while you impress your friends with your (lack of) cooking skills.

So go, drink, be merry and support the baseball team like you do football, and then, when the Cats run up the score on the Tigers on the diamond, cheer like you've been there before. They deserve it.

Next season's football captains were announced at the annual spring game Saturday.

The captains were chosen by a vote of their teammates.

Golf teams look to improve in Big 12 Championship

Both the men's and women's golf teams left room for improvement in their first rounds at the Big 12 Championship.

The women, competing at Harvester, Iowa, shot 344 to tie for sixth after the first 18 holes Monday.

The men's team shot rounds of 328 and 307 for an overall 635 at Hutchinson, Kan., to place eighth heading into Tuesday's final round.

Sophomore Miranda Smith shot a team-leading 83 to tie for 14th place. Junior Edie Murdoch tied for 23rd with a round of 85. Freshman Christine Boucher and senior Carrie Chambers tied for 35th place with rounds of 88, and sophomore Elise Carpentier shot 90 to tie for 43rd.

Overall, the team struggled with very challenging weather conditions, coach Kristi Knight said.

"It was very cold and very windy. Tough conditions on a tough golf course," she said. "It was just unbelievable conditions and a matter of survival, but the team battled the best it could.

"We will see what the weather brings tomorrow."

No. 43 Missouri leads the field with an opening round 319.

The women's tournament will finish

On the men's side, freshman A.J.

Elgert led the team with rounds of 82 and 74 for an overall 156 to tie for 17th. Junior Bryan Milberger is tied for 31st with a score of 160, junior Matt Williams is tied for 34th with 161, freshman Bryan Schweizer is tied for 41st with a score of 163 and freshman Aaron Watkins shot a 166 to tie for 51st.

Like the women, the men also had to battle unfavorable conditions.

"It was kind of a survival thing this morning," coach Tim Norris said. "It was tough on the guys who were here for the first time.

"The wind was different today than it was yesterday, but I thought they did pretty well under the circumstances, though."

Baylor leads the field with a score of 606. The men's tournament wrapped up Tuesday evening.

China protests U.S.' selling of destroyers to Taiwan

By CAROLYN SKORNECK The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - China protested to the State Department the projected sale of weapons to Taiwan.

Ambassador Yang Jiechi registered his government's objection in a meeting Tuesday with Undersecretary of State Marc Grossman.

Philip Reeker, a State Department spokesman, said it could be described as a formal protest.

Grossman, for his part, told the Chinese envoy there is a good deal of work China and the United States ean do together, Reeker said.

Grossman also made clear to Yang the United States expects China to return the U.S. Navy reconnaissance plane that made an emergency landing in southern China April 1 and has been detained since. The U.S. crew was released after 11 days.

Reacting to grumbling from Beijing, the White House said Tuesday that the new U.S. arms sales to Taiwan was spurred, in part, by the 300 Chinese missiles aimed at the disputed island across the Taiwan Straits.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said President Bush approved the sale of four Kidd-class destroyers, up to eight diesel submarines, 12 P-3 anti-submarine aircraft, various helicopters, assault vehicles and other arms, based on the threat that is posed to Taiwan by the missiles.

"That certainly was a factor," Fleischer said. "The president believes very strongly that the best way to promote peace and stability is to make certain that Taiwan has the means necessary to secure its defense needs."

Bush's decision was delivered Tuesday to the Taiwanese by a Pentagon delegation led by a deputy assistant secretary in a meeting at the National Defense University. The president deferred sales of the item Taiwan wants most: high-tech U.S. destroyers equipped with the Aegis combat radar system.

It now is up to Taiwan to decide what it wants to buy, Fleischer said. He did not give a possible date for such purchases or say whether U.S. officials had formally notified

By a similar token, Taussig voiced concerns about city utility services being extended beyond the city limits.

"Those utilities are really a weapon in our arsenal of economic development," he said.

Both new commissioners, who still are in formal orientation for their duties, were elected on platforms of reducing city spending.

Commissioner Ed Klimek said the change indicates a public wish for a more responsive city commission. "We're re-emphasizing some directions with this commission," he said. That is not to say everyone agreed on everything.

opinion on the issue as well. "But it's a useful tool if and when conditions arise," he said.

No commissioner - new or already seated - had strong objections to any item on the list. Everett said he had no new goals to propose, and that he was happy with what already was written. Taussig said he didn't have goals, but pursuits, from his election platform.

These included things for making the city government more responsive to the public to addressing objections he has heard to a United Nations flag outside City Hall.

"I think it would be much more agreeable if we had a city of Manhattan flag," he said.

are applied for by local city governments; and substantial maintenance projects, which include improvements to the infrastructure, such as smoothing and grating asphalt and patching

Eight and a half years remain on the program.

Matthews said an estimated 800 substantial maintenance programs, 593 major modification/priority bridge projects and 28 system enhancement projects have been completed over the life of the program.

He said there were 84 large modification projects completed in the 2000 fiscal year. The 158 projects scheduled for 2001 already have been contracted and most likely will not be affected by the budget cuts, he said.

"Those projects are already in the stages where it wouldn't make sense to cancel them," he said.

Matthews said it is nearly impossible to determine which projects will be cut and which will see completion.

"We have to look at it as what's going to get the most bang for the buck," he said. "There will be certain projects that we can do less improvements to, but some just can't be downsized. We'll go through a number of different scenarios.

"We're loath to take any projects off the plan, but with a deficit like this one, there's not a lot we can do."

Downey checks himself into rehab after arrest Bush to continue work

The Associated Press

CULVER CITY, Calif. - Robert Downey Jr., in another brush with the law over drug use, was arrested Tuesday and booked for investigation of being under the influence of a controlled substance, police said.

Spokesman Alan Nierob said the actor voluntarily checked himself into an undisclosed rehabilitation facility shortly after his release from jail. He had no other details about the

Downey attorney Robert Waters didn't immediately return phone

Downey was on foot at 12:10 a.m. in the city southwest of Los Angeles, Lt. Dave Tankenson said. There were no details about the actor's behavior that led to his arrest, and the type of suspected drug wasn't immediately Downey, 36, of Malibu, was detained a few hours, issued a citation and released to his parole agent, the lieutenant said. The actor must appear in court May 4.

The actor's legal woes date to 1996 when he was stopped for speeding and a pistol in his vehicle.

A month later he was found passed out in a neighbor's home and hospitalized at a substance-abuse treatment center. Three days later, he was arrested for leaving the recovery

In August 1999, Downey was sentenced to three years in prison for violating his probation by missing scheduled drug tests. He was released a year later on $5,000 bail.

Last November, he was arrested in Palm Springs for investigation of alleged drug possession.

In that case, the "Ally McBeal" actor faces a Monday court hearing in challenging the legality of a hotel room search that led to his arrest.

Attorneys for Downey have filed motions that include a bid to quash the search warrant and suppress evidence.

Downey was arrested Nov. 25 at Mery Griffin's Resort Hotel and Givenchy Spa in Palm Springs after police received a 911 call about someone in a hotel room with guns

He was charged with felony possession of cocaine and Valium and a misdemeanor count of being under the influence of a controlled substance. No weapons were found.

on Middle East peace

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Bush assured Lebanon's prime minister Tuesday that even though his administration will employ different methods, it remains committed to peace in the Middle

Prime Minister Rafik Hariri said he told Bush that Lebanon is keen to see some progress on peace efforts between Israel and the Palestinians, and would like the United States to play a more effective role in pushing the process along.

"The president has made it very clear, the United States is engaged in the peace process," Hariri told reporters. "Their perception is not the same, but they are very concerned. They'll be engaged in a different way, using different methods but they are for the peace process."

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said the two leaders also discussed Lebanon's economic woes and Bush emphasized in their "constructive meeting" his support for Hariri's reform efforts.

"The president believes an economically strong Lebanon will be a force for stability and peace in the Middle East and they're going to stay in close contact on that," Fleischer

Hariri did not say what role he hoped the Bush administration would play in the peace process. "It's up to them to decide, but I believe that peace in the region is the responsibility of the United States,"

When Bush entered office three months ago his administration was reluctant to intervene in Mideast peacemaking, but persistent violence may be drawing it into a greater role, at least to try to end the fighting.

Powell said Monday on PBS' "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer" that the Bush administration may be making some headway in persuading Israel and the Palestinians to curb violence in the Middle East, "And we have another level that we're working at to get other connections going between the Palestinian side and the Israel side," he said, referring to diplomatic efforts that also aim at establishing a basis for renewed peacemaking.

Asked if the administration was changing its mind and getting more involved in the conflict, Powell said, The president is completely involved. I'm completely involved. We have been talking to leaders on a very regular basis:

Study shows increase in downloading of Internet music

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Thirtyseven million Americans have downloaded free music from the Internet since last summer, a 40 percent increase, according to a study released Tuesday.

The legal setbacks of musicswapping service Napster seem to have fueled the increase, which spans all Internet users regardless of their experience, age, prosperity or race, the study's author said.

According to the study by the Pew Internet and American Life Project, 29 percent of American adults say they have downloaded music online. That figure was only 22 percent in late July 2000, when the recording industry won its suit against Napster in U.S. District

"The level of sharing and downloading closely tracked the court case," said project director Lee Rainie, the author of the study. In July, the average Napster user shared about 130 music files. That jumped to 200 in January, when an appeals court heard the case.

But lately that number has diminished to about 80 files shared per user, according to Pew researchers. Rainie said that may be due to Napster's filtering efforts. While savvy and persistent users have gotten around Napster's filename filters by inserting typos into song titles, they have discouraged more casual file sharers.

Napster officials declined to comment on the study, other than to say the recent drop in shared files shows that their filtering efforts are working.

While the recording industry has argued that trading music on Napster hurts record sales, the spike in downloading hasn't affected the Tower Records store on Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington. blocks from the White House.

MUSICAL HERITAGE

19th-century repertoire to highlight performance of couple

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

With a repertoire straight out of the 19th century, Kelly and Diana Werts draw from the heritage of Kansas for material.

The couple will perform 7 p.m. Thursday at the Mariana Kistler Beach Museum of Art as part of the Arts Above the Arch series. The Wertses have been performing together for more than 10 years, and Kelly Werts said much of the music comes from the mid-1800s. He said he feels a close tie to the music, not only because he enjoys playing it, but because his great great-grandparents settled in the area.

"When my great-great grandparents settled, they were right near an area here in Kansas where a song was written about life on the plains, and that song was 'Home On the Range,'" he said.

The folk act is being brought in partly because it deals with the Konza Prairie, also the subject of the current exhibition, "Taking Root: The Art of Patricia Duncan." Martha Scott, administrative officer for the Beach art museum, said Duncan's art began with landscape photography of the prairie in the 1970s when she was part of the movement to preserve the tallgrass prairies.

The exhibition is related to the prairie, and the Wild West-style music ties in with that image and perspective of the old prairie," she said.

At least a couple of times a year, Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor for the Beach art museum, said she tries to bring in musical acts. The museum will be set up in a coffeehouse style with candles at the tables and a dessert har stocked with chocolatedipped strawberries, fresh fruit and Sinful Chocolate Cake, Schlageck said.

Schlageck said the style of the music appeals to her personal tastes.

"The Wertses are on the Kansas Touring Program, and not just anyone is put on that roster." she said. "It's good music. I love fulk and acoustic music, and I'm looking forward to it."

The Wertses have been recognized for their talents in several ways. They appeared in the recent film "Ride With the Devil." directed by Ang Lee and starring Toby McGuire and singer Jewel, as wedding musicians, and they also performed on the soundtrack, Kelly said. They also are scheduled to perforn next September at the renowned bluegrass festival, the Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield.

Kelly Werts said besides playing guitar and fiddle, he often plays the spoons and a cigar-box fiddle in the act. Kelly and his wife, Diana Werts. have several different sets they play for different audiences, and though he has tried more contemporary styles, Kelly Werts said he enjoys the folk music for its broad appeal.

"This music is not limited in its appeal to different age groups," he said. "Ages from little kids to grandparents and everyone in between can enjoy the music we perform."

will perform 7 p.m.

Spiting fatigue, students will try to stay on their feet all night at a dancea-thon, while having the chance to win prizes and support a charity.

Dance-a-thon will begin at 7 p.m. Friday in Ahearn Field House. Activities will run throughout the night, and music will be provided by a disc jockey and live music from Ruskabank, Other opportunities for students to have fun will last all night, Mary Bosco, senior in public relations and dance-a-thon coordinator, said.

"Even if people don't want to participate in the dance-a-thon, there will be other chances to dance. such as ballroom lessons and other activities to be involved with," she

All money raised at the allcampus philanthropic event will go to the building of a Habitat for Humanity home in Manhattan. The house will be dedicated in the memory of Nancy Bennett, the late wife of K-State football defensive coordinator Phil Bennett. Bosco said they hope to break ground on the project sometime in next spring.

Bosco said the goal is to get 350 K-State students to participate. "We want this project to be something that everyone can be a part of," Bosco said. "It should be important to know that this is not a greek event or student organization event but a universitywide event."

One of many events planned for the evening is a performance by Ruskabank. Grant Helmers, freshman in business and dance-a-thon committee member, said that through knowing one of the band members he was able to book the band for the dance-a-thon. "The guys are really excited about playing for this event," Helmers said. "It is great that they decided to be a part of dance-a-thon."

In addition to the individual dance-a-thou competition, there are other ways students can win money for their respective clubs or student living facilities. One way is through competing as a residence hall floor. Each dancer from that floor must raise $5, and the floor with the most registered dancers receives $100 donated to its floor.

The other contest involves student organizations. The same rules apply, but the organization with the most participants wins the $100 for its organization. All dancers can register when they arrive at Ahearn.

Dancers who raise $25 will be eligible to win prizes including a TV, VCR, cordless phone and Nintendo 64. Other prizes will be handed out as the night goes on.

Helmers said this philanthropy benefits not only K-State but Manhattan as well.

"This event is important because K-State is such a major part of Manhattan as a whole, and it's good to do something that helps the community around you."

"There's not a lot of college students that live around here," Haslett said. "It's really quiet."

She said she also likes the way the duplex looks.

It was brand new last year when we moved in," she said. "It's really nice.

Ford said he believes some Manhattan residents are concerned about more than just how the super duplexes in their neighborhoods

"They're saying they should segregate the students," he said. They don't want students living in their neighborhoods."

Manhattan resident Corey Birdwell said he is one of the few residents who doesn't have a problem with the new super duplexes.

"I think they're fine," Birdwell said, "There are houses in the neighborhoods that are dilapidated and condemned, not fit for anyone

"But the builders come in and tear them down," he said. "Then students don't have a place to live."

Without the building of new super duplexes, Ford said he is concerned about the condition of student housing in Manhattan.

"Kids will be living in substandard housing paying a premium. Death traps are what I call them.

"Students aren't going to have enough places to live," Ford said. "People will be taking advantage of students.

Mayor Bruce Snead said the commission spent a lot of time trying to find an appropriate solution for the super duplex issue.

"It's a big issue because people are feeling the impact of these super duplexes and they want some consideration," Snead said. "The concerns do have some foundation."

But he said the ordinance doesn't stop the building of housing for students.

"I don't think this is going to have an effect on the availability of student housing," Snead said.

LeMoine said she doesn't think it will affect student housing, either. "I don't want to stop all building," she said.

"It would just be nice to see a few more restrictions."

EDUCATION

In general, Bush and Democrats see education reform from nearly opposite perspectives. For instance, both want to improve teacher quality, but Bush would give states block grants, leaving it up to them whether to reduce class sizes, train teachers more effectively or raise salaries. Democrats want specific grants targeted at each area.

"They're concerned that if programs are consolidated, programs will be cut," Kealy said.

But Democrats say all deals hinge upon Bush's willingness to put billions more into education.

On Monday, Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said, "It doesn't do any good to pass unfunded mandates onto school districts that can't afford them, and that's in essence what we're telling them."

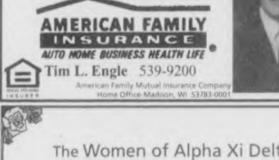

Even a few Republicans are ready to weigh down the education bill over money. Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, has said she might introduce an amendment calling for the federal government to pick up the entire cost

Local residents voice concerns

Litter, noise among complaints from residents living near K-State students.

By KRISTEN DYMACEK Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan resident Bernd Foerster doesn't mind living among college students.

What he does mind is the trash that litters his neighborhood.

"The garbage is a problem," he said.

Foerster, who lives just east of K-State in an area that houses mostly students, said the trash is worst at the end of the weekends.

"Along the street - empty bottles, discarded fast food containers," he said. "I know some people think the world is their garbage can."

With the exception of the garbage, Foerster, a retired K-State professor, said he enjoys living next to students.

"We love the mixture of the students, families and faculty members in the neighborhood," he said.

Because of increasing enrollment at K-State, the conversion of houses into apartments and the building of super duplexes, Manhattan has seen an increase of students filtering into residential neighborhoods to find student housing.

But the mixture of students and Manhattan residents hasn't always been Jason Bickel, junior in mechanical engineering, said he had a party at his house, located north of campus. One of his neighbors called the police with a noise complaint.

problems, but campus officials

"It would have been nice to come straight to us if they had a problem," Bickel said.

But he doesn't blame them for calling the police, either, he said.

"I understand," he said. "They could have been student fearing repercussions if they had talked

Bickel's roommate, Jason Scott, said that with the exception of the party, in the community there haven't been any other problems with the neighbors. Editor's note: This is the second

"We've given them our phone number and told them to call if there's a problem," Scott, sophomore in industrial engineering, said, "Most of the time, they'll call us.'

Riley County Police Department community relations officer Larry

George said a majority of the calls the department receives are about noise.

"The main calls we get are loud parties," George said. The number of complaints received changes each weekend, he said.

"The first week back to school, we might get two or

Bluemont kindergartners to attend Northview School district

By LUCAS SHIVERS

Kansas State Collegian

n an effort to keep all Manhattan schools open, kindergartners living in the Northview School district no longer will be attending their first year at Bluemont School. For the first time in 10 years. Northview will offer a kindergarten class next fall.

"The decision will allow Northview students to attend their neighborhood school from kindergarten on to sixth grade," Lori Martin, Bluemont School principal, said. "The biggest detrimental effect on our school will be the lost of probably more than 60 students."

To relieve overcrowding in the early 1990s, kindergarten students from Northview, Eugene Field School and Bluemont School were moved to Strong Kindergarten Center, said Helen Petrik, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board clerk.

"This was a temporary measure as the district struggled with space and the decision to build an additional elementary school," Petrik said. "Student population was very high, and space was a problem that brought serious overcrowding to other elementary schools."

When Frank Bergman Elementary School was built and boundaries changed six years ago, other elementary students returned to their schools with the exception of Northview, where numbers were high and rooms still were needed, she said.

"Bluemont had extra rooms, so Northview kindergartners attended at Bluemont," Petrik said. "This decision was also based on the strength of the kindergarten center concept and the opportunity for collaboration among kindergarten teachers."

With the recent enrollment decline and availability of rooms, Petrik said it was financially beneficial to move Northview kindergartners back. This will eliminate the need for bussing students.

"It is better for students and a good move in the end," Martin said. "It will allow the bond to their school to be even stronger by adding a year of attendance. There are challenges on both ends, but the transition will be smooth."

Comparing services offered by the schools, Katie Philp, Northview principal, said Northview will look to Bluemont School or assistance in establishing similar outreach and support programs. Current Bluemont programs will not suffer other than reach fewer students, Martin said.

"The move will not effect us that much," said Kristi Glasper, Bluemont School Surround Room teacher. "It just depends on enrollment for Bluemont, and the fact that we may have fewer kids."

The Surround Room is a nontraditional, intervention program for kindergarten students who need extra help, said Renee Hill, Bluemont School community learning center director. Encircling children with a network of volunteers, Hill said the students experience stimulating literacy enrichment activities. With 21

"We will not abandon the program," Martin said. "It is such a fabulous outreach to students. We are just looking to modify the delivery system."

The community learning center is fully funded by a three-year federal grant, rather than on the basis of participating student numbers. Even with decreased enrollment, there will not be funding cuts for the

Graves tries to reinstate fee money

By JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

Gov. Bill Graves might have eased K-State's budget worries last week by amending his original recommendations with a $9.37 million addition to state university budgets.

The new proposed budget will give the Board of Regents universities $5.5 million more to pay high utility bills and $3.87 million to restore the instructional technology fee that the governor had originally planned to eliminate.

"It is really great the governor is trying to get the technology fee reinstated for us," Student Body President Kyle Barker said. "That money was promised to the universities, and it would really benefit the student body."

The technology fee calls for students to pay $1 per credit hour, and the state matches the contribution by paying the university $2 per credit hour. Last year, K-State received close to $1.8 million in revenue from the fee. The program was added to the state budget three years ago.

However, many are skeptical about whether the proposed recommendation will go through.

"We would like to see it happen," Barker said, "but we haven't heard any concrete evidence about where the money is going to come from. With all the budget shortfalls, it is hard to trust this reinstatement."

Student Senate Vice-Chairman Ryan Walker expressed the same concern with the amendment.

"When the governor came out with the amendment, things began to look more positive for the university," Walker said. "However, we are also hearing that the Senate and House of Representatives may not approve the amendments, which would leave us where we started. Nothing is set in stone until the final vote."

Also up in the air right now is how the Kansas Senate and House of Representatives will react to the governor's proposed budget, Sue Peterson, assistant to the president, said.

"In the next few days, both bodies are going to debate the Omnibus bill." Peterson said, "and each will pass their respective bill and move it to a conference committee.

The purpose of the conference committee will be to take all three proposed budgets and come up with a bill that compromises all sides, she said.

"The governor has his plans and both of the bodies' plans look different," Peterson said. "At this time, there are different amounts of money in each suggested budget."

Whether or not the agreed-upon budget will allocate more money to higher education also is

"It is hard to say what we will be facing," she said. "We have been working really hard with the senators and monitoring the situation. These next few days will be really important in deciding the university's financial standing."

Diner to reopen during summer

By STEFANIE HOWARD

Kansas State Collegian

Bob's Diner has yet to reopen after receiving damages from a fire that took place in March. Bob Iacobellis, owner of Bob's Diner, said he was not sure exactly when the diner would reopen. "We are remodeling, redoing everything, so hopefully, within six weeks or so, we will be done," lacobellis said. "Unfortunately, we will not be open before graduation." He said they will be open for the summertime, a time when their customer base doesn't slow down

The fire, smoke, smoldering insulation and entry from firefighters all caused structural damage to the restaurant. Sheri Naasz, senior in social sciences, said she used to eat at Bob's after going to the bars. Since its closing, she said she goes home instead, "I will be glad to see it open again," Naasz said.

Other students said they also look forward to its

"It is fun to go there after the bars to meet more friends there and keep socializing. The food is good and inexpensive and the atmosphere is fun," said Sara Alderman, junior in biology and pre-medicine.

Since Bob's closed, Alderman said she and her friends have gone to other restaurants.

"It seems more crowded at other locations now that Bob's is closed. You have to wait in really long lines that I am not use to," Alderman said.

News of the weird

News of the Weird has reported several times on cat "hoarders" who may "collect" felines as a form of obsessive-compulsive disorder, but none had the quantity of Jack Wright of Kingston, Ontario (361, down from his Guinness Book record 689 in 1994). He drew the attention of the Globe and Mail newspaper in January when he fell behind several months in mortgage and utilities payments because of litter, food and other cat expenses (about $100 (USD) a day) and also because, unlike the typical hoarding case, the local Humane Society has no issue with Wright, in that his cats appeared properly cared for.

Tire company, families of victims in settlement

WASHINGTON, D.C. Bridgestone/Firestone Inc. disclosed Wednesday it is in settlement talks with attorneys representing hundreds of victims of accidents involving Firestone tires.

Company spokeswoman Jill Bratina and Tab Turner, a Little Rock, Ark., lawyer representing many of the victims, characterized the talks as very preliminary. The next session is scheduled for mid-May.

"We're always open to discussions that include a fair and reasonable settlement for all involved," Bratina said.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has collected reports of at least 174 fatalities and more than 700 injuries among more than 6,000 complaints citing tread separations, blowouts and other problems with certain Firestone tires. NHTSA is investigating the tires, but is not expected to announce its findings until at least August.

Most of the accidents involved rollovers of the Ford Explorer, the world's top-selling sport utility vehicle, on which Firestone tires were standard equipment.

Turner said Ford Motor Co. has refused to be involved in the talks. A spokesman for Ford did not immediately return calls for comment.

Turner, who already has settled several tire lawsuits for more than $100 million, said the talks are broad and no details for a settlement have been discussed.

He insisted there would be no settlement unless Bridgestone/Firestone agrees to expand its recall of 6.5 million Firestone ATX, ATX II and Wilderness AT tires.

Bridgestone/Firestone maintains the recall announced last summer is adequate.

Smoke cause of traffic along Florida highways

MIAMI - Highway traffic to and from the Florida Keys was blocked for several hours Wednesday by smoke from wildfires on the southeastern tip of Florida's mainland.

Smoke limited visibility to about a foot on Card Sound Road. and state troopers closed it for just over three hours, isolating the island chain.

U.S. 1, the main route into and out of the Keys, had already been closed since Monday by a brushfire that had burned across 8,000 acres. That highway was finally reopened Wednesday afternoon.

The two highways separate at Florida City, about 35 miles southeast of Miami, then cross coastal marshland and bridges before reconnecting on Key Largo, where U.S. 1 becomes the Overseas Highway for Key West.

The wildfires were not threatening the area's few structures. - The Associated Press

Longwood College fire causes severe damage

FARMVILLE, Va. - Fire forced the evacuation of 400 students from dormitories at Longwood College and heavily damaged a complex of office and classroom buildings, and officials on Wednesday canceled the term's last three days of classes and next weeks' exams.

No injuries were reported in the fire late Tuesday and the cause was not immediately known.

The most serious damage was to Grainger Hall, West and East Ruffner and the historic Rotunda, a complex of connected buildings that was undergoing a $10 million renovation.

"That whole section went up just like a matchbox," Dennis Sercombe, college spokesman, said.

As a result of the construction, most of the complex was vacant at the time of the fire, Sercombe said. "These buildings, they meant everything to our students. They are everything that symbolizes the third-oldest public campus in Virginia," Cormier said.

Four nearby dormitories were evacuated because of the threat of the fire, but they appeared to have suffered only water and smoke damage, said Longwood Media Specialist Judy McReynolds.

The evacuated students will not be allowed to return to their rooms, and all students were asked to move out of their dorms by noon Saturday, said school president Patricia Cormier. Classes had been scheduled to end Friday. She said a May 12 graduation ceremony will go on as planned. Longwood, founded as the Farmville Female Seminary in 1839, is a coeducational, statesupported institution about 60 miles west of Richmond. It has an enrollment of 3,900 students. about 2,600 of whom live on campus.

CORRECTIONS & CLARIFICATIONS

There were three errors in Wednesday's Collegian. The Kansas Department of Transportation is unsure of the number of state highway system projects that will be eliminated. An estimated 800 substantial maintenance programs, 593 major modifications/priority bridge projects and 28 system enhancement projects are scheduled to be completed over the life of the program. Also, most of the 158 projects scheduled for 2001 already have been contracted and, most likely, will not be affected by the budget cuts. The Collegian regrets these errors.

Student flies in from Washington

By APRIL MIDDLETON Kansas State Collegian

Liam Atchison doesn't live in Manhattan. He doesn't even live in Kansas. However, for two days of every week he is at K-State to take courses.

Since January 2000, Atchison, graduate student in history, has flown from Wedbay Island, Wash... to Kansas City, Mo., on Tuesday. From Kansas City, he drives to Manhattan. After attending classes for two days, he repeats the journey in reverse to get back

Then, the next week, he starts the whole journey over again.

"It's been hectic, but I'm so glad to be here," Atchison said. "K-State is a magical place."

K-State isn't the place that Atchison started his work for his doctoral degree, but he said unusual circumstances led him to Manhattan.

Atchison began working on his Ph.D at a British university. He said that after he had spent five years working on it, someone got a hold of his research and published it. Since his research no longer was his original work, the university asked him to switch his topic if he wanted to continue his work at the university.

When that didn't work for him, he contacted professors from K-State, who helped him continue his dissertation.

Tve always wanted to come back to K-State to do this, but I opted to travel the world a little and get some worldly experience. The situation was bad, but it's so good to be back," Atchison said.

He graduated from K-State with a bachelor's degree in 1977.

Atchison is an academic dean and associate professor of historical theology at Mars Hill Graduate School in Seattle, Wash.

He teaches courses Monday and Tuesday. He said that between the courses he teaches and the courses he is taking, it's hard to find a free minute.

Though he said it's rough to be away from his wife and 17-yearold son, Jesse, every week, they have been very supportive.

"My wife was worried that I would ruin my health by trying to do so many things, but I'm better than I have been in years, Atchison said. "I get to be home for the weekends. That makes it easier on everyone.

Atchison's daughter, Hope, is a freshman at K-State this year. He said he thinks it is nice that he getsto spend time with her, even though she is away from home.

Hope said she has been lucky to have her father to visit with so often, even though they are so far away. She said it has made the transition from high school to college a little easier.

Hope also said she was happy her dad was able to come back to K-State. She said she's always known K-State is where he wanted

"It's kind of like a dream come true for him," Hope said. "He has always loved K-State and ultimately, this is what he's always wanted to do."

Atchison said that when he first decided to come to K-State, he didn't know what to expect. After three semesters, however, he said he has enjoyed the experience.

"Everything has gone so great." he said, "Everyone in the history department has been great accepting me and helping me get through this."

Atchison made his last trip to Manhattan this week for courses. He said he expects to graduate in Tve been a student since I was five," Atchison said. "40 years is definitely enough, but it will feel strange not to be a student."

K-State senior wins award for 2nd year

By LYNNE HERMANSEN Kansas State Collegian

K-State senior Dawn Dechand has won the Udall scholarship two years in a row.

"It is a great honor," said Dechand, senior in biological and agricultural engineering-environmental.

The Udall scholarship is a $5,000 award given for a year to support students hoping to make a difference in environmental science, environmental policies, American Indian or Alaskan tribal policies or health care

The Udall scholarship is an award given in honor of former U.S. representative of Arizona Morris K. Udall's achievement in his work campaigning for environmental causes.

"It is possible for the same student to win multiple Udall scholarship awards," said James Hohenbary, K-State Udall scholarship representative.

Dechand said she always has been active in engineering with a focus on environmental issues.

"I have done lots of research on waste management issues, and I have always been strong in math and science," she said. Hohenbary said most awards that have been granted to K-State students have been from the environmental science and policies

Dechand said she became interested in the environment after many volunteering activities.

"Being outdoors with the Girl Scouts, when I was younger, and participating in projects with the Keep America Beautiful program helped give me a proactive environmental interest," she said.

After winning her first Udail scholarship, Dechand said the winners attended a conference the following August.

"I met lots of people with the same interests, and it was great to get in touch with the same kinds of people," she said. "We met people from all types of science backgrounds such as biologists and geologists, but we all had the same interests with the environment."

Although the award is prestigious. Hohenbary said many people are not familiar with the scholar-

"Apparently, many people have not heard of the Udall scholarship," Hohenbary said.

Students can apply for the award in early fall. From these applications a committee of faculty members choose candidates to be submitted to the Udall Foundation. The winners are decided in February.

"This is one of the few awards that requires institutional endorsement to compete," Hohenbary said. "This is why, I think, it is one of the most prestigious awards out there."

Dechand said she encourages interested students to apply for the Udall scholarship.

"Anyone from any major can apply as long as they have strong interest in such activities," she said. Now K-State is ranked second in the nation in granting the Udall scholarship.

"I think this gives signals to perspective students as to the qualities of programs here at K-State," Hohenbary said.

"It, also, encourages additional quality students to apply. The success students have received from these competitions serve as role models for our freshman and sophomores.

Hohenbary said he believes the award gives K-State a positive academic reputation.

"The fact that our students have won more often than other prestigious schools indicates the high quality education experience to be.

Does anybody else have trouble falling asleep when the roommate whistles in their sleep? I do.

Parking is limited on the K-State campus. We are in a budget crunch in the state. Yet, the legislature unveils a new underground $13 million parking garage in Topeka, next to the state capital. What's wrong with this scene?

"I didn't know southerners were Nazis.

My roommate and I walked out of Physics lecture earlier because our professor was making everything a lot harder than it had to be and when we left he said, "Hey don't walk out mad." And I think that's kind of funny, because speaking of mad, wait until he sees his t-vals.

Do you know what I think one of the bad things about the Campus Fourum is? People hear things and see things on campus and instead of saying or doing something about them, when they happen, they wait and go. "Oh, oh I better call the Campus Fourum about that." And they just call and whine about that and nothing ever gets done, What's wrong with this picture? Animal rights activists have a problem with killing a rattlesnake, but see no problem with killing unborn babies. Oh. by the way, you snakes, I mean snake lovers, both are legal. How's it feel when you don't get your way?

Landon Lectures educational, valuable to K-State students

The editorial board should be ashamed of its Monday editorial regarding the Landon Lecture Series.

What evidence does the Collegian editorial board have to substantiate its claim that "the quality of speakers has decreased"? Just last week, one of the world's most renowned historians delivered a lecture about a famous Kansan whose leadership changed the course of world history. Next week, former Mexican president Ernesto Zedillo will deliver a lecture. Other speakers this year have included a famed journalist, a cabinet secretary and one of America's top military leaders. Would the editorial board like to try its hand scheduling speakers of this

If a point can be derived from Monday's editorial, it's that the lecture series is not "directed toward students." How is this true? As part of his appearance last week, Stephen Ambrose was on campus for three days, participating in forums, discussion groups and other events. These were free and open to students. Did members of the editorial board attend?

Speakers in the Landon Lecture series are important. They are busy. Many donate their time and speak without charging a fee. If students wish the series to be directed more toward them, they should take the obvious first step and attend the

The Collegian would find its editorial voice respected if it stopped to research its articles, instead of writing pieces that sound more whiny than well-reasoned. The Landon lectures are insightful, entertaining, and most of all, a wonderful opportunity for K-State students to hear world leaders' thoughts without leaving their own backyard.

Staying calm during time crunch key to completing work, staying sane

OK, this is what I've been waiting for. Time crunch.

The more eager among us have countdowns on bulletin boards or dry-erase boards or simply are carving notches into parking metersmore classes, or a week and change after today. I have a feeling the more ambitious of us have started counting the hours. Me, well, rationally I know it's going. to be over before I realize it. But right now I've just looked at the extra tight jeans of time I'm going to try to stuff my oversized burn of work remaining into (Note: some metaphors are natural and organic and extend your argument well. Some are not. Consider this before you, too, become a victim of inane metaphor syndrome. I blame Time's getting stolen from me right and left. I watched as a parking meter graciously swallowed a quarter and - lo and behold -24 minutes slipped into some quantum singularity, and all I got was six minutes of borrowed time on university asphalt. And me without my trusty iron pipe to reexplain the time-space continuum to this moronic little change-eating toaster. My hand is an unsuitable replacement for an iron pipe, and even so, at that time of morning I have a feeling I'd look less like Jackie Chan and more like Zsa Zsa. Gabor whapping the thing. I am full of hate, and I'm all fat now.

The buffer between us and finals has shrunk to thonglike size: we all know what's there, it's just that the wiser of us have chosen not to regard it too long. Denial. plays an important role, whether you're an undergraduate with a full slate of classes and finals in each, a graduate student with a mammoth opus due, or the general manager of the Philadelphia Flyers. Normally, this is where yours truly would step in with helpful hints to survive these last few fleeting moments of the semester. Problem? I don't know how. And hey, what's the point. in "surviving" when it's going to be a dim memory before it registers as a real problem? This will be over before you know it, trust me screwdriver and let's talk this over). It's (Interesting note - last man who said that to me was lying and inflicted more physical pain on me than any person I am not related to. Medical degree or not, I think he liked it. But it's hard to hear him laugh over the drill and the marrow-chisel).

Just don't expect the laws of time and space to endure like Mario Lemieux for a while. They'll rupture and break down before you know it (For example, wasn't this column due a day ago? Erin? Put down the normal if you suffer severe déja vu when taking your fifth final in the same building (I typoed that as "déja fu," which apparently is the ancient martial art of having already fought someone). And you'll have Chinese food arrive before you even get hungry. Similarly, the books you order via interlibrary loan will disappear into a time/space well and end up in the Library of Alexandria. Don't worry, I have a card there. So does Bob Dole.

Sage advice? No, just an idea: stay calm. Don't panic. You could fly off the handle at every person at home or work who chooses this particular moment of the semester to bitch at you. And I know you'd like to. But realize what they forget or just choose to ignore - "they" have the same time crunch "you" do, and just because they're oblivious to your feelings doesn't mean you should be (It does mean you can be with a clean conscience. But that's beside the point). Let these things slide and get your revenge in

And don't let it get to you. Get the job done. Tearing about your apartment like a howler monkey on crack won't solve anything - unless you're gunning for that open spot on 'Ally McBeal" right now. Besides, if you die today, you might miss the next season of the XFL. And how could you do that to yourself?

Stereotypes of Muslim culture untrue

This is the fourth in a weeklong series of columns about subcultures studied

Approaching the mosque, I noticed a path leading up to double door. A cloaked

in traditional hijab entered through a

door on the side of the building. Seeing a man standing just inside the other door, I continued in that direction. My entrance into the men's sphere of Islam began beyond the doors ahead. I soon became a regular visitor to jumma, or Friday prayer at the mosque, attended other social gatherings with the Muslim community, as well as lectures on Islam.

This culture was unfamiliar to me. having grown up in Kansas all of my life. Most of my knowledge about Islam came from the television news and magazines. My perception of Islam was that of an exotic religion, which was worshipped half way around the world, often portrayed by the media as being violent, dogmatic and controlling. This was the base knowledge that developed the preconceived ideas I had about Islam.

These notions turned out to be misguided and wrong. When I entered this community I was greeted immediately with inquisitive smiles and friendly handshakes. My misconceptions quickly were swept away, and a true understanding began to develop. I was amazed by the devotion of this community. The Quran, the holy book of Islam revealed 1,400 years ago, continues to inform Muslims in their day-to-day decisions. In their fastpaced lives, they still make time to pray five times a day as they are instructed. Islam guides the lives of its faithful practitioners down a path of peace through a relationship with Allah. These men were nothing like the small group of radicals most often shown in the media to represent Islamic society.

Over the course of the semester, I became accustomed to attending jumma and conversing with my new friends. They have been an incredible group to work with on a project I initially approached with a mixture of excitement and open anxiety. This was a unique learning experience. I received an insight into a culture that is misunderstood by much of American society, including myself, prior to by K-State students this semester. this project. Contrary to popular belief, Ossama bin-Laden is not your typical Muslim, nor are the Taliban in Afghanistan. The image of the oppressed woman covered in cloth, hovering behind the domineering man, does not embody the ideals of Islam. Every day, Americans are bombarded with these images through the media and films.

Misconceptions of Islam as an exotic, fundamentalist religion that should have no place in the modern world abound. Even as anthropology majors with a supposedly un-culture bound view of the world, we entered into our projects with a few misconceptions and assump> tions of our own. As I stared at the door to Manhattan's mosque, the one specifically for the women, I wondered, as a feminist, how could women choose to walk around, covering their entire bodies, their identity hidden? I walked up the stairs with these questions in my mind, but the answers I discovered were more intriguing than I could have expected.

Female power lives in Manhattan's mosque. The women who attend the mosque are dignified and confident, secure in their faith in Allah. Wearing the hijab, the veil, is not a symbol of submission to men, but expresses submission to God.

In Islam, both men and women submit to Allah equally. In fact, the word Islam in Arabic means submission and peace. Muslims find peace through their submission to Allah.

The veil signifies complete dedication to Islam and Allah's command. Women who follow Islamic law choose to wear the veil to maintain their own privacy. Men should not have the power to judge them on appearance, but instead women should be evaluated on the strength of their character. In Islam, the strength of one's character is greatly measured by the strength of one's faith.

The women in Manhattan's mosque are well-educated, powerful members of the community. Some are professors; others are working on their doctoral degrees. Islam encourages the education of its followers. It is a practical religion.

This is not to say that the oppression and exploitation of women in dominantly Muslim countries does not exist. In many societies, people practice traditions handed down by their parents assuming it to be Islamic, when, in fact, they are cultural practices that might have no basis in the Quran or the Hadith. The point is that broad, sweeping generalizations create misconceptions. One rotten apple does not mean the apples in the orchard next door are equally spoiled.

Lawsuit against tobacco looks to end

By KAREN GULLO The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration has not asked Congress for money in its new budget to pay for a massive lawsuit against big tobacco companies, prompting speculation that the Justice Department won't continue the suit.

The administration has requested $1.8 million to pay salaries and staff costs for the tobacco litigation team in the department's civil division, Justice officials said. But no money has been sought to pay for legal work, such as gathering and analyzing millions of documents that tobacco companies have asked to see.

The litigation team has estimated that it needs more than $57 million this year to keep working on the case, according to The Washington Post, which cited a March 12 memo sent by tobacco litigation lawyers to Attorney General John Ashcroft.

The litigation team said that without more money, it cannot keep pursuing the case. David Ogden, former assistant attorney general who had headed the department's civil division, had made the same argument last fall. Ogden left the department in January. The acting head of the civil division, Stuart Schiffer. could not immediately be reached.

The Justice Department suit. filed in September 1999, accused big tobacco companies of putting profits before health by concealing data showing that nicotine is addictive and that smoking causes disease. The government seeks to recover hundreds of millions of dollars in medical costs borne by federal health programs to pay for smoking-related illness.

Tobacco companies have denied the charges. Republicans and members of Congress from tobacco states oppose the litigation and have tried to block the Justice Department from getting money to continue the suit.

Congress redirected $11 million from other federal agencies to pay for the litigation and can do the same this year, Justice Department spokeswoman Susan Dryden said Wednesday. She would not confirm whether the department needs another $57 million.

She said Ashcroft has not yet reviewed the memo. No decision has been made on whether to continue the lawsuit, she said.

During his confirmation hearings Ashcroft said he would evaluate the litigation, which he opposed when he was in the Senate. President Bush said during the presidential campaign, "We've had enough lawsuits."

Justice Department officials said the lack of a specific request for litigation money doesn't indicate the agency's position on the lawsuit, saying there was no money in last year's budget for the suit beyond $1.8 million for staff costs and that funding level has been continued in the new budget request. This budget does not take a position on the funding of tobaccolitigation, Paul McNulty, acting principal associate deputy attorney general, said at a budget briefing last week.

Dryden said the decision about whether to continue the suit was a policy matter, not a budget issue. But money is crucial to the government's ability to process millions of pages of tobacco industry documents, some dating back to 1954, and a huge number of government documents the industry wants to see. A trial is to begin in January

The lawsuit names Philip Morris Inc.; Philip Morris Companies; R.J. # Senate kills sales, estate tax hikes

By JOHN MILBURN The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Senate on Wednesday rejected a bill that would have put $60 million more into public education through higher sales and estate taxes.

Legislators already have approved a $67 million increase that will add $50 to the base state ald per pupil.

The 23-17 vote followed more than two hours of debate on the bill, endorsed earlier in the day by the Senate education committee.

Educators had scant hope that lawmakers would approve additional funding for schools beyond the $67 million increase contained in a measure signed Monday by Gov. Bill Graves, who had approved the latest proposal.

"If the Legislature chooses to do a patch job by borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, the problem only worsens," said Sedan superintendent George Blevins. "We all know how difficult it will be to see increased funding come about next year, since it is an election year."

Before they end the 2001 session, legislators must eliminate a $206 million hole in the state's budget. The House and Senate budget committees have come up with plans to cover the shortfall, but only the Senate's plan raises taxes. Combined with earlier increases, the latest Senate school finance plan would have raised base state aid per pupil to $3,910 from the current $3,820 and increased the state's coverage of special education costs.

Graves included the tax increases in a proposal he outlined Tuesday to fix the budget.

Another issue still to be resolved was the renewal of the statewide property tax levy, which generates about $380 million for public.

As amended by the House, the bill renews the levy at 20 mills for the state's 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1, then rolls it back to 18 mills in fiscal 2003.

The bill contains a tax break for residential property owners. The House version exempts the first $30,000 of residential property value from the tax, increasing the figure from the current $20,000.

State's tennis team will attempt to break into the upper conference echelon of tennis beginning at noon today at the Big 12

The No. 42 Cats enter the tournament seeded fifth and will play 12th seed Oklahoma. While K-State wasn't able to finish among the top four teams and receive an automatic first-round bye, head coach Steve Bietau said

"We've lost so many matches 4-3," junior No. 1 singles and doubles player Alena Jecminkova

In singles, K-State's top three players - lecminkova, sophomore Petra Sedlmajerova and senior Eva Novotna' - all have racked up 20 wins this season. No. 4 singles, junior Kathy Chuda, has fewer wins but has amassed a 9-2 conference record. The No. 5 and 6 singles players, though, have struggled at times. No. 6 singles, freshman Hayley McIver, has improved throughout the season and played some of her best matches as of late, Bietau said.

"Hayley had a very good match against Oklahoma State last weekend, picked up a good win, and I thought she played better yesterday than she did the week before," Bietau said after the loss to Texas last Sunday. 'She's progressing.'

"It's a style of play that we're trying to get her to adopt where basically she's going to have to do something to hurt people," Bietau said.

"Against teams like these, you can't wait for them to lose. You've got to do something to create some problems for them and pressure them in some way and, in some way, take the match from them.

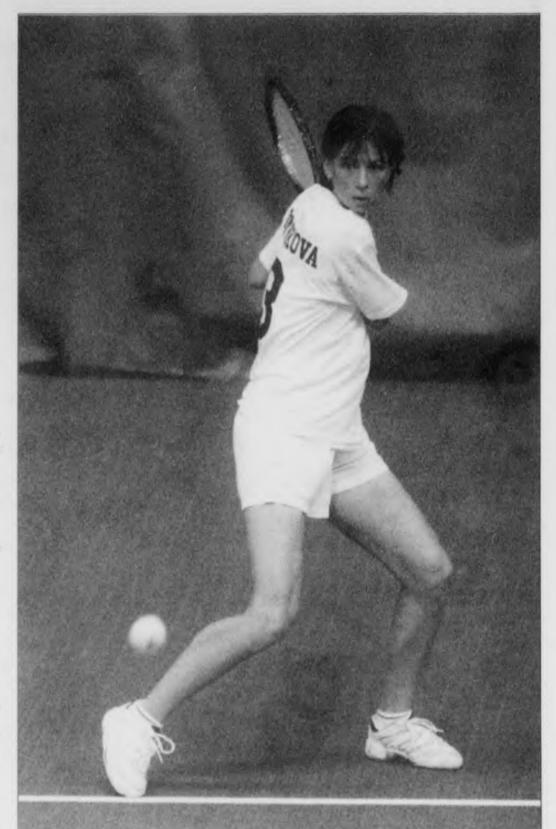

K-State could pick up some momentum in the tournament in its first-round match with Oklahoma.

The Cats have won the last two meetings and defeated the Sooners 6-1 this season.

If they win, the Cats will be tested in the next match against Texas A&M, which has a 5-0 series lead over K-State.

Nonetheless, the team plans on winning and securing a berth in nationals, Jecminkova said.

K-State men's golf team earned its best conference finish since 1997 by finishing eighth at the Big 12 Championship on Tuesday in Hutchinson.

The Cats struggled the first day in rainy, windy conditions and shot a first-mund 328. They improved in the next two rounds, though, shooting 307 and 306.

The team finished eight shots behind seventh-place Kansas, which is ranked No. 32. Baylor took the title, finishing 10 shots ahead of Oklahoma and Texas.

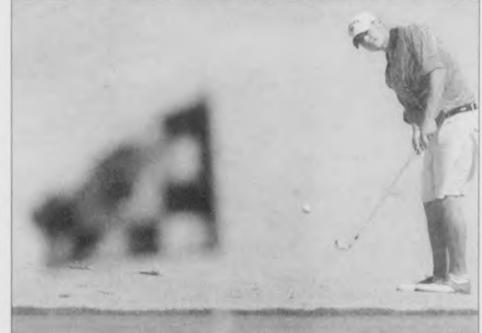

Picked to finish 11th in the conference by a preseason Big 12 coaches poll, placing eighth is evidence of how much the team has improved during the season, coach Tim Norris said.

I think we have made a lot of progress," he

"Four years ago, we finished 12th by 20 strokes, but we have moved up every year since then. You always want to do better, but we can't be disappointed with our finish, especially since we were playing three freshman."

One of those freshman, A.J. Elgert, actually led the team by finishing in a tie for 20th. Elgert shot rounds of 82, 74 and 76 to finish in the top 20 for the third time this spring.

The Cats now will have to wait to see if they qualify for the NCAA Central Regional on May 17-19 in Stillwater, Okla. The top seven teams from K-State's district qualify for the tournament. "I thought the guys responded well. We got off to a slow start, but the guys righted themselves."

The K-State baseball team's five-game winning streak came to an end last night as the Cats lost at Oral Roberts, 12-5.

K-State never was in the game, falling behind 4-1 in the second inning when two errors and four Oral Roberts runs put the Cais in an early hole. Then, in the third inning, K-State plated two runs, but Oral Roberts answered with three more of their own.

The closest the Cats would come after that would be in the next inning, when second basemen J.D. Loudabarger drove in leftfielder Brad Anzman from third on a fielder's choice. Centerfielder Nick Sorensen later would score on an error by second basemen Danny Boyle.

After four innings, K-State trailed 7-5, but from then on, the game was all Oral Roberts. The Golden Eagles would score five more runs, including four in the bottom of the fifth to seal the

Henderson ties Babe Ruth's record for walks Tuesday

The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - The Man of Steal is about to lift a record from the Sultan of Swat

Rickey Henderson, who's usually in a headfirst hurry, took a leisurely stroll to first base Tuesday night and tied Babe Ruth's major league record of 2,062 walks.

Always able to inject a bit of swagger into the moment, Henderson took off his batting helmet and waved to the cheering crowd as a small burst of fireworks went off.

The walks record might seem somewhat mundane next to Henderson's many other accomplishments, but it's notable for a pretty big reason - the Babe.

"The name comes to mind, and you think about the greatest baseball player that played the game, the guy that probably kept this game alive for so many years," said Henderson, who's been baseball's career stolen base leader for a decade.

Henderson would have owned the record earlier if not for a statistical adjustment by the commissioner's office in 1999 that added six walks to Ruth's total, 64 years after his last game.

Mp3.com gives users an easy way to check out songs over the Internet from local bands by using the location search to find bands in a certain area.

Ruskabank, a local ska band since 1996; put Some Time," on Mp3.com as soon as the compact disc was finished.

'Since we've put our music on the Web, we get e-mails from people in Europe and Asia wanting to hear more from us." Dave Spiker, guitarist for Ruskabank, said. "It's the cheapest way to get people from all around to hear our music."

Mp3.com is a free service where aspiring musicians can build a fan base, expose their work and sell CDs. Now, there are over 40,000 artists who have put their music online, and the site has over 500,000 hits a day.

Since the San Diego-based company was launched in 1998, Mp3 has become the second most searched word on the Internet. right after sex.

Kevin Regier, member of local band Elemental, said the band put its first professional four song demo on Mp3.com, along with other sites that offer the same service.

"The exposure that bands like us get from these sites is incredible," said Regier, sophomore in agriculture technology management. "Unlike bands that are against it, we've got nothing to lose by putting our music out there."

Mp3.com has more than 250 categories of music, and by using the search engine, a location search will display the sites of all Manhattan bands that are registered in its data base. Each band has an information page, a way to e-mail band members and links to the band's home page.

"Mp3.com is like an alternative home page for us," said Dave Studnicka, trombone player and lead singer for Ruskabank, "It's great because it gives free promotion to our music. but also links fans to our Web site and a place to purchase our CD."

Studnicka said he put a live version of a cover song, not on Ruskabank's album, into Mp3.com and attracted a huge response.

"With mp3's, the fans are the ones that keep it alive," Studnicka said. "After we put our site up, it's really a lot of other people that keep our music circulating."

"It's not easy for local bands to promote themselves, but doing it through Mp3.com cuts out the middle man," he said.

Another aspect of Mp3.com is the radio station option where users can set up their own broadcast selection and attract regular users to the channel. The Gary NewSka Hour is a radio show on KSDB-FM 91.9 and has a listing on mp3.com with which Buskabank is involved.

The Gary Newska Hour is a direct connec tion for kids that want to listen to an eclectic mix of music," Spiker said.

Studnicka chooses what songs are played on the station, and he said he gets a large response from other local bands who would like their music played on the show.

"Pay back for Play back" is a feature on Mp3,com that actually pays the artists a certain amount of money for each time someone downloads the band's site. Studnicka said this is not an incentive for artists because it is a very minimal sum of money.

"For every unique download to your site, you get, like, a couple cents," Studnicka sald, "which, in a year, could add up to maybe $30, which is cool, but we just use the site to get noticed."

Bilberry said he thinks Mp3.com is the most sincere site out there for local artists to use.

*Besides the easy navigation throughout the site, Mp3.com is the most friendly to local bands and the most useful for their lans."

The site is easily navigable, aesthetically pleasing and provides plenty of time-consuming little features as well as information about tours of interest. So if country music is your thing, this is the site to sate your palate.

Razzies.com

URL: http://www.razzles.com

This site is the Web branch of the Razzie aware a developed to juddapose the Oscars by giving their awards only to the worst of the worst. Ruzzie.com lets you search through the archives to find past winners of the award as well as take a daily Razzie poll. It would be nice to see the site add a Razzie site of the day or take on music but for all that it insults Hollywood big shots, the site still is amusing. The problem is that Razzie.com has limited what can be done with the site. But if there's nothing better to look at on the Internet, you always can find out things like the fact that Kevin Costner won worst actor in 1998 for "The Postman."

Residence halls filled to capacity

By KRISTEN DYMACEK Kansas State Collegian

Danielle Froelich, Ershman in prepharmacy, is ready to move off campus after living in the residence halls for a year.

"I've met a group of friends that I'm going to live with next year," Froelich said. "I get to live in my own house and have my own bedroom.

She said she enjoyed living in the residence halls, but she's ready to move.

"It'll be a change of environment," she said. "We'll be more on our own."

Froelich is just one of several students who will choose to leave the residence halls and move to an apartment, house or duplex next year.

Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said there are Manhattan residents who believe if K-State built more residence halls, there would be fewer student housing problems off campus.

However, the addition of more residence halls would not help the off-campus housing crunch, he said.

"Because we don't have freshman residence requirements, not everybody is going to choose to live on campus," he said. "Students are going to choose where they want to live, and they all don't want to live in the residence halls.

"We're not going to sit here and have a domination of the housing market," he said. Derek Jackson, assistant director of residence life, said Housing and Dining Services isn't required to house all of the students enrolled at student

"There's no way we can house 20,000 students. We don't have enough room to house everybody," Jackson said. "Our market is not designed to house every student."

There are 10 residence halls, including a scholarship house and the Jardine Terrace Apartments available for students who want to live on campus. Approximately 3,700 students lived in residence halls this year.

The halls, which can house as many as percent occupancy mark the past few years, Werring said.

> "We don't have people living in the lobbies or anything," he said, "but we are pretty full."

Goodnow Hall resident assistant Devin Schehrer said one reason the residence halls are so full, especially at the beginning of the year, is because of late contracts turned in by residents.

Disney Bronnenberg attempts to block a spike at the net during the first game in a fall 2000 home match. Bronnenberg has announced her intentions not to return to K-State in the fall.

Volleyball player to transfer at end of May

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Disney Bronnenberg will not return to the K-State volleyball team next season.

On Wednesday, the senior setter completed the paperwork necessary to be released from K-State and will seek to transfer to another school, where she must sit out a season before using her final year of eligibility.

The decision to leave K-State implies nothing negative about the university, Bronnenberg said.

"I just don't think this is the right fit anymore. That is in no way a negative undertone against K-State because I absolutely loved being a Wildcat - every minute of being here. I loved this university," she said, but I think over the past three years I've grown and changed so much that my needs have as well. Right now, I think life's asking me to make a change based on those needs. "It's a personal decision. Everything's influenced, from my academic life to my social life to my location to my athletic life. It's all kind of factored into one, but the bottom line is, this just isn't the right place for me." Athletically, the Bloomington, Ind., native started every match for the Cats the past three years. As a sophomore, she was selected as first-team All-Big 12 and was named honorable mention All-Big 12 last season when K-State advanced to the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament for the first time in school history.

This spring, redshirt sophomore Laura Downey was challenging Bronnenberg for the starting setter position, but that competition did not factor into the decision to transfer, Bronnenberg said.

"That in no way, shape or form had anything to do with my decision," she said. "I think that people who are tough competitors make everyone else better, and that hasn't crossed my mind at all.'

In fact, Bronnenberg said leaving the team and head coach Jim McLaughlin, who was on a recruiting trip and unavailable for comment Thursday, possibly was the hardest part of all.

enny Whearty found her first roommates to be much too unpredictable. Behind every door was a surprise, and, more often than not, a mess. She wanted someone she knew what to expect from. Who better than her sister? Jenny lived in the residence halls her first year at K-State. She didn't want to stay more than a year. She said that when she met other women from her floor who wanted to move out, they agreed to share an apartment.

To her surprise, it wasn't at all what she had expected.

"It was a nightmare at times," Jenny said. "There were always problems and surprises. Sometimes surprises aren't good.

Two of her roommates didn't return to Manhattan after the summer, so Jenny was left without roommates.

She found what she said was the perfect solution to her housing dilemma when her sister, Amanda, moved to Manhattan to attend K-State.

Temporary parking lot to be ready for fall

By ALYSON RALETZ

Kansas State Collegian

A temporary parking lot will be built north of Weber Hall this summer and ready for students this fall. The lot will be between Serum Plant Road and Jardine Drive.

The parking lot will have a five-year life, Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said.

"You never know what's going to happen with funding," Abbort said. "We are on hold right now with the bus system. This still gives us time to figure out what we need to do. It gives us a little more flexibility with expansion while acting as a convenience for students."

He said there still will be lights, emergency phones and security cameras, just like other lots.

"It has to be a safe lot, even if it's temporary," he said.

He said it most likely will be a Z lot and have approximately 300 parking stalls. Off-campus students will utilize the lot the most, he said.

"I think what was happening was, some students that chose to park around Call Hall or Weber Hall were being pushed into lots over by the veterinary medicine buildings," he said. "If we add this lot, it will alleviate pressure, and veterinary medicine students won't be pushed into other lots.

Angela Beesley, junior in agricultural communications and journalism, said she parks by Weber five days a week.

"At the beginning of the semester, when everyone was still going to class, I had to wait up to 20 or 30 minutes for a spot," Beesley said. "I had to park by the veterinary medicine buildings a few times."

She said that now she only has to wait about five or 10 minutes for a spot by Weber, but she is looking forward to the new lot for the beginning of next fall.

She said she does not, however, think it should be a Z lot.

"I think it should be a lot for off-campus residents only," she said. "Residence hall students already have that entire lot by Weber to park in. I don't think it will be a huge problem, though.

Abbott said they will break ground this

"It's not a complex job," he said. "They have a lot of flexibility. The construction is not really going to affect students."

Merchants, RCPD enforce off-campus parking rules

By ALYSON RALETZ

Kansas State Collegian

Local city merchants are giving students a red light to stop parking in their customer-only stalls and are encouraging students to park on campus.

Paula Kellyfrey, co-owner of Subs-N-Such, on Claffin Road., said she has a problem with students taking advantage of its parking. The restaurant has only two marked stalls.

"For example, at 9:30 this morning, a girl parked her car in one of our slots," Kellyfrey said. "She was told to move her car or risk being ticketed or towed, and she said, 'Oh well, I have done it before.' Then she locked up her car, picked up her bookbag and headed off to campus."

Kellyfrey said the Riley County Police Department is called to fill out parking citations for cars in her stalls at least every other day, but it has varied. On average, wrecker services have been called to tow cars about three times a week, but she said she has

Question of the week

O: I want to write a letter to the City Commission about housing inspections. I am not sure who to address my letter to other than the mayor. Who would be the appropriate person to write my letter to?

A: Although Manhattan mayor Bruce Snead would be an appropriate person to address a letter to, the Manhattan housing officer, Jai Johnson, would also be an appropriate person to express concerns to. Letters should be sent to the City of Manhattan at 1101 Poyntz Ave. You can also attend the next City Commission meeting May 1.

K-State extension worker killed in car accident

A K-State employee died Tuesday in a car accident one mile north of LaCrosse, Kan.

Alvin C. Soukup had worked for the communications, information technologies branch of K-State Research and Extension since February 1999. He was a technology support specialist.

Soukup was returning to Hays after working with extension staff in Wichita and Scott Counties.

According to a K-State Media Relations and Marketing press release, the Kansas Highway Patrol's preliminary report said Soukup was driving northbound on U.S. Highway 183 when the 2000 Ford station wagon he was driving collided with the back end of a 1995 Ford truck.

Soukup's funeral will be at 10 a.m. today in Victoria, Kan., at St. Fidelis Catholic Church.

Par Melgares, news coordinator for K-State Research and Extension, said the family is accepting memorial contributions for Soukup's children.

Girl again allowed to use sign language on bus

BRANCHBURG, N.J. - A hearing-impaired girl who was barred from using sign language on her school bus will now be allowed to sign as long as she obeys safety rules.

"Everyone needs to know that signing is allowed on the bus," Superintendent Lois Capabianco said Wednesday.

Danica Lesko, 12, was told by her school principal last month that she would be suspended for three days if she continued using sign language, which he said was "disruptive."

Branchburg school district officials were soon bombarded with calls and e-mails from people who questioned the ban. The issue was also discussed on talk radio shows.

Capabianco said the school district's attorney had sent the girl's parents a letter that clarifies the policy.

The Leskos said they were seeking an apology from school officials.

"My daughter was obeying the rules of the bus," Mary Ann Lesko

The Leskos have already sued the school district over an incident they said caused the girl's hearing damage, when a student set off a bottle rocket in a hallway in November.

Sentencing of Downey unlikely to include prison

LOS ANGELES - Robert Downey Jr. could spend six months in a drug treatment center following his latest run-in with the law, but he is unlikely to go to prison, a state corrections spokesman said.

The actor's parole agent has six days to file a recommendation with his supervisor on whether Downey should return to prison as a parole violator.

That was "unlikely," Russ Heimerich, a spokesman for the California Department of Corrections in Sacramento, said Wednesday.

Downey's arrest about midnight Tuesday abruptly ended his Golden Globe-winning role on the Fox show "Ally McBeal," but Heimerich said his celebrity status would not affect

"He's not being treated more harshly nor is he being treated more leniently," he said.

"Just because somebody has violated their parole doesn't mean they go back to prison," he said, adding that drug-addicted parolees often suffer relapses and the goal is to "get them off the stuff."

U.S. to compensate for foot-and-mouth disease

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The government will pay farmers the fair market value of any livestock that have to be killed to control an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said Thursday.

The promise of compensation is intended to encourage farmers to promptly report any signs of the disease, which can sweep through entire herds in days.

Veneman said the Bush administration also may offer compensation for some additional expenses, such as the cost of feeding livestock while they are awaiting slaughter.

Farmers can "report it (the disease) with the full assurance that they will be indemnified," Veneman told the House agricultural appropriations subcommittee.

The department has broad legal authority to spend whatever money it needs to control an

Riley County students experience prairie art

By NANCY HULL Kansas State Collegian

Riley County Grade School students always have been in the midst of the prairie. They just haven't always noticed it before.

After all, an art teacher never has existed at the school. However, with the help of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art's project "The Prairie Through New Eyes," these students have written a prairie symphony, seen prairie paintings, watched prairie wind dancers and been exposed to the prairie and the arts in many ways.

The project, funded by an Arts in Education grant from the Kansas Arts Commission, uses music, poetry, dance and visual arts that relate to the students' natural environment.

Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor at the Beach art museum, said the decision to partner with Riley County Grade School for the project was easy.

"Who better to work with than those who sit in the middle of the prairie every day and probably don't even realize it exists?" Schlageck said.

Teachers' workshops, student tours of the Beach art museum and Konza Prairie, a curriculum that will be on the museum's Web site and in books, artists' residencies in the classrooms and student performances for the Riley community have been part of the project over the school year.

Residencies in the classroom have been prairie wind dancers from Lawrence, poet Elizabeth Dodd, singer/songwriter Thad Beach and children's author Jerri Garretson. Patricia Duncan, whose tallgrass prairie works exhibition inspired the project, will visit classrooms in May.

Schlageck said the variety of artists doing residencies goes with the idea of looking through the prairie through as many eyes as possible. She said that through the residencies, students enjoyed the activities so much that they didn't even realize they were learning - like when the dance troupe had students dance as different things in the prairie such as weather, wind and

"They're seeing new possibilities and learning new things that they've never thought of before," she said. "It's a way of thinking that's really important. The creative thinking strengthens analysis skills, critical thinking and problem solving, which are all skills these kids need as

Sue Garver, third-grade teacher at Riley County grade school and an advisory member for the project, said not only have students expanded their knowledge about the arts, but they've realized there are artists in Kansas. All of the residencies were Kansas natives.

"There's a need for kids to see someone right here in Kansas," Garver said. "Most authors are from California or back east, and this makes it a reality.

The exposure to arts has given students a chance to show their skills,

"A lot of students are not really talented in academics, but have talents in the arts. And by having actual hands-on experience with sculpting and drawing, these kids have the opportunity to broaden themselves," Garver said.

Garver has seen the benefits of the project, not only from a teaching viewpoint, but also from a parent's view. She said her two sons have learned from the project.

"My first-grader, Joel, has been talking about going to the prairie and making prairie fire," she said. "That is just perfect for their age."

Parents have been able to be a part of the project by watching performances students put on for the community. The performances are part of the 21st Century Community Learning Center program through the Kansas Department of Education. The program uses weekend, afterschool, summer and adult programs to use the school building as a community center.

From a teaching standpoint, Garver said the teacher workshops helped teachers learn more than just what was presented during the classroom residencies.

"The residencies and workshops extended our teaching by giving other thoughts that made lessons relevant to everyday teachings and the prairie," she said.

The project focuses on showing teachers that art also is in subjects like math and science, Kristie Schemm, K-State art intern for the # Union enforces rule barring unsupervised teens after 7 p.m.

The K-State Student Union is enforcing a new rule to ensure that the Union's recreational facilities are being used by K-State students and not becoming a teen-age hang

"Kids were congregating in the billiard area. It looked overwhelming, and nobody wanted to be around it," Eddy said. "In my opinion, the college students would come down and see them and Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the problem was brought before the UGB, and the it decided to raise the age limit for people in the Union after a certain time. The age limit was raised from 15 to 18, and people under the age of 18 had to leave by 7 p.m. or be accompanied by an adult.

"We are trying to make a compromise. Junior high and high school students get out of school at 3:30. They can use the facility until 7," Connaughton said. "After 7, people under the age of 18 can still use the facility for organized events such as birthday parties with adult supervision."

Connaughton said the Union informed people of the new rule by hanging signs in the Union and handing out flyers the week before implementation of the rule. Leiters were sent to the high school and every local junior high school to notify students.

Since people were informed in advance, Eddy said the Union did not have any problems implementing the rule. However, she said the rule is not trying to exclude young people from using the facilities - it's only ensuring that the

Solace for deep thinking to be found in grocery store aisles

We all have times when we need to get away, when we just want to go to a place of solace and think about things,

Nor do I take a drive in my car or run down the lane.

No, when I need to think, I head to the local grocery store. It doesn't have to be a Dillons, although in Manhattan it usually is. Any store will work.

This is the place where the great pearls of wisdom sometimes emerge, and the issues of the world are rehashed and thought about again.

It's where I think about the future, and I question whether there will ever be a better way for a college student to eat aside from noodles and frozen foods. This is the first thought I have walking into the store, while rehashing my makeshift shopping list in my mind.

It's a list that will take me through the aisles of the store and back again, looking for the best price and brand of cereal. Walking through, the produce looks good, but man, the

Children prepare for school swap

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

The children at the Kindergarten Roundup on Thursday night could care less whether they would be at Northview School or Bluemont School next fall - they were just excited to be going to kindergarten, said Kim Donoho, kindergarten teacher at Bluemont School.

Kindergarten Roundup was organized at Bluemont School for families of children who will be attending both Bluemont School and Northview in the fall. It's a night for parents and staff to get an idea of what's in store for their future kinder-

"Our objective here tonight is twofold," Bluemont School principal Lori Martin said. "We expose the kids and the parents to the policies and procedures of both schools and familiarize them with the faculty, while on our end, it gives us a projection of how many kids we will be dealing with next year in order to meet staffing needs."

The night also gave both schools' principals the chance to smooth the parents into the transition that will be taking place next fall.

For the first time in 10 years, children who reside in the Northview neighborhood will get to attend kindergarten at that school. Until now, all kindergartners in both the Northview and Bluemont School areas have attended Bluemont School because of the lack of space and high enrollment numbers at Northview.

Martin said she predicts about 30 children in next fall's kindergarten class at Bluemont School and about 60 at Northview

"I know that parents who will already have kids at Northview this year are excited for the transition," Katie Philp, Northview principal, said. "For parents who are really involved, it would be hard to split times between the two schools.

The night also informed parents about some details both schools are trying to iron out. Martin said they still aren't sure whether they will be able to grant teacher requests at Northview or what start times will be for both morning and afternoon kindergarten classes at Bluemont School. With that, they still are trying to produce a potential child-care program that would start at 7:30 a.m.

MIKE SHEPHERD/Collegian

Kim Donoho, a kindergarten teacher at Bluemont School, leads a group of soon-to-be kindergartners in a round of songs Thursday night. Donoho said that despite the recent news about Northview School adding a kindergarten class, these children don't care where they go to school.

While the parents were busy getting the lowdown on important issues such as transportation options and immunizations requirements, their children were getting a taste of what next year was going to be like.

The children spent some time in the kindergarten classrooms and participated in various activities, including reading, singing, building with Lego bricks and interacting with some of their future classmates.

"Tonight gives them an overview of what kindergarten will be like, just a little taste of what they can expect next year," said Raven Leece, student intern at Bluemont School and senior in elementary education.

Most of the people in attendance at the Roundup were parents whose children will be attending Northview.

"We just heard about it, and we're really excited," said Kim Gibbs, parent of a kindergartner who will be going to Northview. "The school is just right across the street from where we live, so it makes it easier on us.

If the recent transition hadn't taken place. Gibbs said she would have had to drive her son. Tyler, to kindergarten every morning.

Dan Meek, another Northview parent, already has a third-grader at the school. He said he thinks the transition is good, but transportationwise, it wouldn't have mattered that much to him.

"If this wouldn't have taken place. we would have dropped Donovan off. every morning at Bluemont, so it's no big deal, but it will be nice to have kids in both schools," he said.

Manhattan residents will have the opportunity to putt their way around Aggieville in the first Junior Chamber Mission Inn Bar Golf Tournament at 8 tonight.

Teams of three will be able to participate, and the cost is $5 per person. Prizes will be given away, and Wildcat Creek will be donating the putters and golf

"There will be an award for best individual score and best team score," said Dawn Stotts, individual development vice president for Manhattan Jaycees.

The Manhattan Jaycees will play host to the event. All proceeds will go to the Junior Chamber Mission Inn, a program that helps families and children affected by HIV and/or AIDS. Jaycees is a civic organization.

"The JCMI is similar to the Ronald McDonald House," Stotts said. "The Jaycees fund-raise for all types of events. We had a haunted house for Halloween and are involved in the Identi-kid Program. Jaycees basically have their hands in everything."

Jackie Woodward, JCMI program director for Kansas, said there are four inn-hospital JCMI places in the United States to help give care to HIV or AIDS patients. She said they also provide counseling services.

Student Senate on Thursday adopted a resolution supporting the Principles of Community statement.

The Principles of Community, introduced by Faculty Senate President-elect Cia Vaerschelden, is a statement of policy that sets ideal standards of behavior for the university, Vaerschelden said.

"This is not a legal document," she said. "It just sets a sense of what we want our aspirations to be at this university. It sets a precedence of what the ideal community at K-State involves and what our expectations are."

The statement will be passed through five bodies at the university; including Faculty Senate, Graduate Senate Association, Classified Senate, Student Senate and the administration before becoming

NBA stars changing league into soap opera

What I'm about to tell you might shock, stun and stupefy you (try to say that three times fast).

Yes, my friends, it's a harsh, harsh reality we're faced with. The opera. Now let's meet the budding stars of the show - LA Laker Kobe Bryant and Scottie Pippen of the Portland Trailblazers. Give them a round of applause - everybody.

And don't worry. The series premiere will be out soon enough. In fact, they've probably got enough ammunition to film two episodes.

Here's the little rundown. In Game 1 of the Lakers/Blazers series. Bryant left the court in the first half after taking an elbow from Mr. Technical himself — the Blazers' Rasheed Wallace.

Bryant promptly was taken to the locker room for about four minutes to be treated for bruised ribs.

Then -- "miraculously," mind you - he made his return in the second half to score 25 of his 28 points and lead LA to a 106-93 victory at the Staples Center.

Here comes the drama. During a Wednesday practice. Pippen (who guarded Bryant most of Game 1) accused the Laker guard of faking the whole rib injury.

"He's got bruised ribs? Which side? Aww, he's trying to be like Mike," Pippen told ESPN, referring to former teammate Michael Jordan's effort in Game 5 of the 1997 NBA Finals against Utah, when His Airness scored 38 points for the Chicago Bulls despite battling food poisoning.

"He wanted to come out and have a heroic performance after saying he had bruised ribs," Pippen scoffed. "It didn't look like he had bruised ribs. He didn't find a shot he didn't like. He wasn't hurt that bad.

Can't you see visions of the first soap episode beginning to formulate? Using the set from "General Hospital," Kobe is lying in bed with a large pad covering his ribcage. gossiping with his Laker teammates about the evil, trash-talking brutes from Portland.

Robert Horry and Shaquille O'Neal, among others, provide a strong, supporting cast in Bryant's defense, especially when looking at what they had to say to ESPN reporters.

"He's just trying to get Kobe off his game, get a little edge, that's all." Horry said of Pippen's remarks. "It's all about talking stuff, to get a response from Kobe. I know his ribs hurt.

And 7-foot-1-inch Shaq gets into the mix as well.

"I love it when people talk," O'Neal said. "As an athlete, I'd rather just beat somebody than cry. I'm a man. I want to play man's basketball."

Well, it's not much of anything right now with all the whining and name-calling. Why do they even air the NBA Playoffs during prime time? It seems it'd make more sense to run it in the afternoons following "Days of Our Lives" and "As the World

I just can't believe what I'm hearing. Is this what the league is turning into? Or is it just a bunch of guys joking around and having

At least Kobe was somewhat lighthearted about the whole matter.

When asked if he expected Pippen to go after his ribs the rest of the series, Bryant laughed and said, "Probably. I would."

Nonetheless, it's just time to shut up and play. Kobe vs. Pippen is a great matchup, and those two shouldn't get caught up in an off-thecourt scuffle.

That is, unless they're trying to pursue a new daytime career. Who knows - maybe an acting role on "Days of Our Lives" soon will open

"Today was an off-day," head coach Mike Clark said Thursday afternoon. "The seniors said on the bus ride home yesterday, 'Coach, we want to go,' and they made it a mandatory practice today." That decision came after K-State's five-game winning streak was snapped against Mid-Continent for Oral Roberts on Wednesday night in Tulsa. Okla. Despite the 12-5 loss. though, Clark said his team still is poised to finish the season on a good note. Sunday - 1 p.m. "As a coach, what you want to be able to do for your guys is put them in a position to obtain the dreams that we started with. We're in that position now," he said.

"We handle our own destiny. We're playing good ball right now, and we've proven that no matter who we go up against, we can bear them, so we're coming in with some confidence this weekend."

Both teams will enter the series with a sense of urgency. The Tigers Fifth-seeded K-State completed a 4-0 sweep over 12th-seeded Oklahoma in the opening round of the Big 12 Tennis Tournament in Waco, Texas, on Thursday.

After sweeping the doubles match to earn the first point. K-State's No. 3, 4 and 5 singles players won their matches to seal the victory.

"This was just a really clean performance by our team," head coach Steve Bietau said.

Senior Eva Novotna' earned the first singles point for the Cats by easily defeating Stephanie Sajbert at No. 3 singles 6-0, 6-1. Then, freshman Hayley McIver used aggressive play to defeat Tiffany Streeter at No. 5 singles 6-1, 6-2.

"I just tried to come to the net as soon as possible," McIver said. "I tried to keep my level as high as possible all the way through and keep attacking." Kathy Chuda clinched the victory with a 6-2, 6-4 win over Melissa Mendieta at No. 4 singles.

The No. 1, 2 and 6 singles matches were suspended following the fourth point. All three matches were led by K-State. In a change from the majority of the season, freshman Natasha Boyko played at No. 6 singles instead of Paulina Castillejos, who sprained her ankle against Texas last Sunday.

With the win, K-State improved to 12-9 overall. The Cats will face fourthseeded Texas A&M at 11 a.m. today. During the regular season. K-State lost to the now-No. 21 ranked Aggies 4-3 on April 21 in Manhattan.

After shooting rounds of 344, 308 and 316 placing ninth at the Big 12 Championship on Wednesday, the Cats won't find out until Menday whether they made the regional championships. While the ninth-place finish might not exactly sound great. the finish wasn't so bad considering where the team placed last year, coach Kristi Knight said

"They accomplished the best finish for K-State in Big 12 or Big 8 Championship history. That's the first time we've ever beaten that many teams," she said. "We were only four shots out of sixth. Last year, we were 40 shots out of sixth."

After the first day Monday, though, the team was just worried about finishing the 18 holes. Thirty to 40 mile-per-hour winds and cold temperatures caused scores to soar into almost unheard-of heights.

"There were girls who shot over 100, and that never happens," said sophomore Miranda Smith, who tied for 28th with a 243, "Last year in Big 12, there was maybe one or two scores in the 90s. In all my years of golf. I don't think I've ever seen scores that high in the tournament. The wind was blowing so hard that you'd hit a shot, and it wouldn't turn out anything like you thought it would turn out."

As a result, confidence was at a premium for every player.

"It was hard to have confidence on the green. For the first five holes, I was scared my ball was going to move, so I didn't putt very well," said freshman Christine Boucher, whose team leading 237 tied for 13th. "After that, I just realized it didn't matter anymore, just putt it. I think we lost a little bit of confidence on the putting.

However, the weather improved Tuesday, and the scores rallied. After shooting 344 on the first day, K-State dropped 36 shots to 308. Then on the final round Wednesday, the Cats added eight shots to finish in ninth place after holding sixth after the first day.

Still, that final day was nothing to be ashamed of, Knight said.

"It wasn't a good day for us. There were a couple big numbers on the back nine that hurt us," she said. "They did their absolute best, but 316 was the best the Wildcats had on Wednesday. They fought hard - I'm proud of them.

Now the team will wait to see if it's selected as one of the 21 district teams to advance to regionals, and that decision is causing almost as much anxiety as the tournament.

"There's nothing we can do, we have control over it. All we can do is sit and wait for the phone to ring," Smith said. "I guess we'll find out Monday whether we get a chance to go to regionals or not.

I think we all wish we had played better because if we had played better we probably would have had a pretty solid argument to go to regionals, but the way we played, we did it to ourselves. We're on the bubble. But that's OK. It's exciting just to have a chance to go, but I think we're capable of much bigger things as a team.

prepares for fall

Kansas State Collegian

Though the cold Kansas weather has forced its season to have a slow start, the K-State water ski team was glad to get in a few spring tournaments to get the team ready for the fall.

The team looks forward to a successful fall season after last weekend's tight second-place finish to KU in the KU Spring Splash at Mokan Lake in Lawrence.

"KU was a tough loss, but with the team we have right now, we have a great chance of going to nationals in the fall," club president Nick Heckerson said.

This would be a feat that K-State has never accomplished since the team's beginning in 1983. Though the team has spent the past 10 years with the top five of teams in its league, they have not yet been able to clinch that No. 1 or 2 spot needed to qualify for nationals.

"This fall looks great for us," Heckerson said. "We have the strongest team than we've had in the last five years and a new class coming that is just as good."

The team will finish its spring season this weekend with the seventh annual KSU Super Wake Tournament in Emporia on Super Lake. The event will run Friday through Sunday with wake boarding on Friday and the jumping, slalom and trick competitions on Saturday and Sunday. This is one of only two tournaments the team was able to participate in this season due to the weather.

After a short break for summer. the team will hit the water once again as the fall school year begins. The fall season is considered the true season for the team, and because the water is warmer they are allowed more weekends on the water.

Their season will run through October with regionals on the second weekend. If the team's hopes hold true, it will conclude the season at the national championships in Phoenix during the last week of October.

Leading them through this season will be one of the most recognized college jumpers in the country. Jumper David Dlugosh is the No. 1 jumper in the region and is second in the country at the college level. The Emporia native is also thought to be one of the top-10 all-around skiers.

Other skiers to look for this fall include Tara Raney and Christy Cammack, both leaders for the women's team. The men also have key jumpers Josh Woolard and Jeff Breuer, along with top slalom skier Jarett Staab.

"We have a young, but very skilled, team this year," senior Jennie McKibben said. "I look forward to a great season this fall with all the talent this team has."

Three freshmen will be joining the roster this fall, making their almost 50-person team that much stronger. The increased interest in the sport makes these roster numbers the biggest the team has seen in K-State history.

"We are pretty set for this fall," Heckerson said. "With the skill coming in combined with the skill this team already possesses, we can expect to go all the way."

The numbers are impressive to McKibben, a senior transfer from Iowa State. Though she said she thinks the weather in Kansas is a factor in the team's increased skill level because of increased practice time available, she said she sees this team as being better than her old team in all-around competition.

As the team wraps up its spring season, anticipation for the fall rises. The team is definitely ready to hit the water.

"With this team, who knows what could happen," Heckerson said. "Next season's possibilities are

Water ski team KU athletic director resigns

The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Kansas athletic director Bob Frederick, who hired basketball coach Roy Williams and then kept him from leaving for North Carolina last season, resigned on Thursday.

Frederick said he was leaving after 14 years as the Jayhawks' AD because the job has "gotten a lot harder in the last few years." The 61year-old Frederick was also under fire after his decision in January to drop men's tennis and swimming.

"Sports talk shows, the Internet, chat rooms - all those things have made it more difficult for head coaches and ADs and even for chancellors," Frederick said at a news conference. "I'm looking forward to being out on the farm and spending more time with my family."

Frederick, a widely respected college administrator, ran into mounting criticism with the elimination of men's tennis and swimming. The cost-cutting move triggered outrage among many influential alumni, some of whom even took part in a campus demonstration.

Except for Williams' basketball program, most Kansas teams have fallen on hard times. The football team has not had a winning season since 1995.

Frederick, who became the school's AD in 1987, helped create the Big 12 Conference in 1996 and was one of two finalists to be the league's first commissioner. He also served as chairman of the NCAA's basketball tournament selection committee.

Frederick oversaw a $35 million renovation of Allen Fieldhouse and Memorial Stadium, which included new locker room facilities and a state-of-the-art press box.

To many Kansas fans, his finest achievement was hiring an obscure assistant basketball coach -Williams - in 1989.

The winningest Division I coach of the 1990s, Williams was wooed by his alma mater North Carolina last summer and cited loyalty to Frederick as one factor in his decision to stay at Kansas.

"I have very mixed emotions at this time," Williams, who stood in the back of the room at the news conference, said. "On one hand, Dr. Frederick is a teacher and an educator, and he will continue to use his skills in the classroom.

"My other emotion is one of great sadness. Dr. Frederick gave me a chance 13 years ago, and I will always be indebted to him. I will never be able to repay him, and he will always have my loyalty."

Also attending the news conference was chancellor Robert

"This is not a firing, a buyout, a request for resignation," Hemenway said. "Bob Frederick has brought integrity and inspirational leadership to the athletic department."

challenge, and hopefully we can get three well-pitched ballgames. If we do that and play good defense, we'll have an opportunity to win."

Taking the mound in game one for the Cats will be junior Luke Robertson (5-5, 6.01 ERA), who has given K-State fans something to cheer about in his last two outings against Oklahoma and UCLA. Missouri will counter with Shaun Marcum (3-1, 5.19 ERA).

"There's really no way of saying it any other way for us," Robertson said. "These are the most important games of the year. Bottom line, if we don't get the job done, what we've done so far doesn't mean a

To get the job done against the Tigers though, K-State will need a solid five to seven innings out of Robertson, Saturday starter Kevin Melcher (2-2, 4.83 ERA), and Sunday starter Brock Smith (1-3. 7.38 ERA), Clark said.

Robertson has gone at least six in his past two outings, and he said it's important to come out with the same kind of focus against Missouri.

"I've got to eliminate mistake pitches," Robertson said. "When I get ahead in the count. I need to put them away instead of piddling with them up there - end it there."

Another element of the K-State attack this weekend will be the solid bats of second baseman J.D. Loudabarger and rightfielder Pat Maloney, both of whom lay claim to 15-game hitting streaks entering Friday's action.

"We need to come in with the same approach, keep playing hard with that blue-collar approach," Loudabarger said.

Maloney and Loudabarger have been holding hot bats lately. The 15-game stretch ties the school's longest hitting streak since 1998, when Yancy Ayers hit safely in 15 straight as well.

"It's something nice," Maloney said, "but the biggest thing for us is to win these three games. If neither one of us keeps our hit streak and we win all three games, it'll mean a lot more to both of us."

Still, with the school record, 18-games, within reach this weekend, Maloney said he and Loudabarger aren't feeling any pressure just yet.

"It doesn't affect the hitting streak as much as it does just wanting to perform well," Maloney said. "You just want to get a couple of big hits to help the team, and if it goes along with the streak, then it goes along with the

Thirteen seniors, ranging from residence hall assistants to a national Jewish woman scholar to a former student body president, received the 2001 Dean of Student Life Outstanding Graduating Senior awards.

The third annual award ceremony, sponsored by KPL Gas Service and hosted by Pat Bosco, dean of student life, was Thursday in the Union Flint Hills Room. The 13 recipients did not apply for the award. Rather, Bosco said, they were nominated by student life directors and friends of student life. programs, including admissions. financial aid, Greek Affairs, the Department of Housing and Dining Services and others.

A selection committee then chose winners from those nominees. This year's committee included Carla Jones, associate dean of student life; Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs; and Chuck Werring, director of housing and dining services. Each recipient was awarded a plaque with a picture of the student in front of

The award came as a surprise to each student.

"I didn't even know that the award existed, so it was a nice surprise," recipient Nicholas Lander, senior in psychology, said. Lander, like all of the recipients, has been involved in a variety of activities while he has been a student, including serving as a Haymaker Hall resident assistant for the past two years, being active in Intervarsity Christian Fellowship and working on the All-University Homecoming Committee.

"I've really enjoyed everything I've been involved in," Lander said.

To be nominated for this year's awards, a student needed to be an undergraduate student who will graduate in this academic year. All nominees have been involved in at least two areas of student life, and all demonstrated the ability to work with diverse groups of students. Also, nominees were required to have positively affected programs that improve the quality of student life.

Law and music have little in common.

That's precisely why Pat Caffey, municipal court judge, has made them both a part of his life for more than 20 years.

"My normal work day in court is totally different from anything like singing," Caffey said. "For me, singing with this group is a break from the job. It's a lot of fun."

The group is the Little Apple Barbershop Chorus, and it's performing Saturday evening at McCain Auditorium. The performance is an annual event for the 67-member chorus, which focuses on the preservation of the barber-

"It's great to look out into a crowd and see so many smiling faces," Thomson said, "This sound has quite a following, and everyone seems to enjoy it.

Thomson said he's enjoyed singing with the group for more than 25 years.

"It gets in your blood," he said.

"For some people, it's country music that really gets to them. For some it's rock, for some it's opera. For me, there's something magical about the barbershop harmony that makes it very stimulating."

Audience members Saturday night will experience a complete show, not just singing. Calfey said. Each year has a different theme, and this year's is "Let's Get Away From It All." Costumes and scenery are incorporated into the performance.

"We don't just stand there singing on risers," Caffey said. "We really entertain you."

Saturday night, the group also will be offering a monetary contribution to the City Park bandshell

"We use the stage and encourage live music," Stanfield said. "The renovation and rebuilding of the bandshell is important to us."

Besides their annual performance, the chorus also sings for churches, participates in barbershop quartet competitions, sings personal Valentine's, and, this year, will perform at Manhattan's Arts in the Park. They also give grants, from money raised through performing, to elementary and secondary educators at the Kansas State University Music Educators Symposium.

"We want music education to stay alive," Stanfield said. "Every guy in our group got a start in a school or church choir. You don't learn singing by accident but are influenced by a teacher of some kind. We want their efforts to be recognized."

THE REAL DEAL

Troupe uses space, audience to perform Shakespeare authentically

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY Kansas State Collegian

Audiences should be aware that the Shenandoah Shakespeare Express has cast them in key roles in their traveling production.

The acting troupe is on its way into town for the seventh year in a row. Its members will perform faithful productions of William Shakespeare's "Hamlet" and Tom Stoppard's "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead."

The audience becomes part of the production, re-enacting "Hamlet" the way Shakespeare intended it, said Jim Warren, artistic director and co-founder of Shenandoah Shakespeare Express. "Shakespeare wrote the audience into his plays," he said. "We want audience members to see the faces of other audience members to get stronger reactions and create a unique communal "Hamlet" will be performed Sunday at the City

Dead" will be performed Monday at Nichols Theatre, taking advantage of the thrust stage, where the audience surrounds the stage on three sides, Warren said. "We try to replicate how the plays were performed in Shakespeare's own theater," he said. "We want the theater to keep the actors and the audience intimate, but the troop has become very adept at giving any space the Elizabethan feel.' Penny Senften, founder of eventsponsor Side by Side Theatre & Music, said she began Side by Side as a way of filling in the gaps where Manhattan is lacking in arts and entertainment, and she said she is delighted to be host to the troupe. "They have a great gift for presenting Shakespeare in a way that is contemporary," Senften said. "The plays are briskly paced, and the actors know how to say the lines to make it completely understandable.

The 11 actors, both female and male, make up 2001: Odyssey Tour Troupe. They not only perform multiple roles, but also they travel and perform without extra help setting up and breaking down their set, Bill Gordon, director of tour operations, said.

"Each actor is assigned a specific production duty, like merchandise sales or vehicle maintenance, along with unloading and packing up all props and costumes written for that,'

Warren said. "We rely on the

The set is not elaborate, Warren said, but the incredible words of Shakespeare are what is important.

"There is no big set or complex lighting because the plays were not ters to make the audience feel transported to the castle in 'Hamlet,' or the forest in 'Rosencrantz.'"

Choosing actors for this intense production is difficult, Warren said, because not only do the actors have to get along as a group, they have to be talented enough to learn the unique acting style of Shenandoah Shakespeare Express.

"We usually have to train even the most experienced actor to do Shakespeare our way," Warren said. "I look for people who won't be afraid of getting reactions from the audience, because in this line of work, you never know what's going to happen on Some people have a preconceived idea about Shakespeare because of his use of language, Warren said, but the way this troupe performs doesn't feel like Old English.

Annual music festival to benefit local charity

By BETSY STVERAK

Kansas State Collegian

With 11 bands, Jell-O wrestling and dunk tanks making up some of the festivities, the fourth-annual Haylapalooza will be an event immersed in sound, Jell-O and water.

a.m. Saturday, Haymaker Hall is sponsoring Haylapalooza. This all-day festival will be broadcast on KSDB-

Kicking off at 11

FM 91.9 and will take place on the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Claflin Road across from Haymaker and Moore halls.

The lineup is Phat Albert, Egomaniacs, O'Phil, Effigy, Time Has Come, Elemental, Podstar, Invalid,

One Sad Monkey, Broken Bone Coalition and Ruskabank as the > headliner. The event is sure to be a fun time and also raise money for a good cause. Brandon Kidwell, coordinator of the event, said. "This year the money we're raising is for the local charity The Wonder Workshop," he said. "We hope to make sales with Tshirts, food and COURTESY ART activities. Kidwell, sophomore in political science, philosophy and pre-law, said Haylapalooza first started in 1998 when the Haymaker Hall Governing Board decided to raise money for the Manhattan community.

"It became very popular and successful, so I decided to get involved in 2000," he said. "After last year, I have a really good idea how it works, so I made sure to be a part of it again.

Ruskabank also has been a part of Haylapalooza since the beginning. David Spiker, lead singer and guitarist for Ruskabank, said this is the band's fourth year playing at Haylapalooza.

"We are very comfortable with playing this show," said Spiker, senior in music composition and technology. "We like to see the people come out and enjoy all the music and activities."

The seven-member ska bånd was formed in 1996 and has toured the Midwest and West Coast, supporting two released albums and the arrival of a third one on the way. Spiker said he likes playing Haylapalooza because of its differences from other shows Ruskabank plays.

"It's outside and free for the public," he said. "It's a good chance for a lot of bands to play together in one spot."

Among the lineup is the up-andcoming band Effigy. Colin MacMillan, guitarist for Effigy, said his band also is looking forward to Haylapalooza.

"It's going to be one of the biggest shows," he said. "It's a good chance to 3 get people out there to see the bands and hang out."

The Topeka-based band has been around for three years cultivating its punk sound, MacMillan said.

"We have played at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and Silverado Saloon and released two full-length albums," he said, "So we're pretty excited to play an outdoor concert that draws more people.'

Just like Ruskabank and Effigy, Kidwell said he hopes to see another great turnout this year.

"I hope to see many people having fun and raise a good amount of money," he said. "We hope to carry on the Haylapalooza tradition into 2002."

seen up to 12 or 15 cars towed in one day.

She said she believes students should think of how frustrating it is to go home and not be able to find a parking spot.

"It is just as annoying for us when students park here, and they're not supposed to," she said. "Students, at least, can park on the street and just walk a little further to get home. It's a bad thing for us. When customers can't find a spot, we lose business."

If students park their cars and are seen walking across the street to campus, the RCPD is called immediately, she said, whether they are gone for 20 minutes or two hours.

"A difficult problem is, the customers who come in here, grab a sandwich and walk over to campus," she said. "We don't want to tow our own customers. It is a dilemma because we don't want our customers thinking we are rude to them, but they are really not supposed to get a sandwich and go to a class for three hours, RCPD Capt. John Doehling, commander of the patrol division, said the business owners have to call in and report a parking violation. They also are the ones who have to call a wrecker service to tow a car, he said.

"We don't go out looking for parking violations in private or commercial lots," Doehling said. "The police department is not in the business of towing vehicles."

City parking citations can range from $4 to $50, and having a car towed can cost between $70 and $100, he said.

"For the past two months, though, wrecking services are opting not to tow unless we are standing by," he said. "It's been our decision, in these routine parking violations, not to stand by because it amounts to a considerable time expenditure on our part. We feel there are better matters our officers can attend to."

He said there are certain circumstances in which an officer will stand by. For instance, if a car is blocking the entrance to a parking lot, the officer will wait for the wrecker to tow, he said.

Darwin Abbott director of K-State Parking Services, said students should not park freely off campus if they intend to leave their car and go to class.

Parking stress at this time of the year comes when K-State has several large events like lectures and conferences occurring around the same time, Abbott said.

He said that toward the very end of the year, students have papers and projects due, so they park illegally and get tickets.

"We hope people build in the requisite time to park," he said. "If you are already stressed about your papers and tests, you don't need to be stressed about something wrong with your car."

Schehrer, junior in secondary education, said. "So we haven't always had the ideal rooms that residents have wanted."

She said that as the year progresses, rooms free up as residents graduate or move out, and the halls become less crowded.

Despite the full halls, Werring said there always has been room with relatives, moving in with her sister just made sense.

"We've always lived together, so we're used to each other," Jenny said. "It just made sense for us to share an apartment.

The sisters both said they always have gotten along. Although they aren't willing to go as far as to say they are perfectly compatible roommates, they said they don't fight like they would with someone else.

"We've grown up together, so we know what gets on each other's nerves," Amanda said. "Also, when there is a confrontation, we don't feel bad getting onto each other about it."

Whenever there are two different people with their own distinctive personalities, Amanda said there are bound to be habits that get on each other's nerves. For her, it's that Jenny leaves shoes strung throughout the house.

"If it was anyone else, it would probably really bug me," Amanda said., "but since it's my sister, I've just learned to let it go.'

Jenny said neither of the two are tidier than the other, so they share equally in cleaning the apartment as well as grocery shopping. She said it prevents arguments when they do things together.

Abby Moseley, a mutual friend, said the sisters squabble about minor things, but she's never witnessed a huge fight.

"I think they actually get along better than other roommates do," Moseley said. "For the most part, they don't have any problems."

Jenny said most roommate arguments come from having different friends and interests. However, she said they always have had the same group of friends.

"Amanda and I have always hung out with the same group of friends since high school," Jenny said. "We're close to the same age, so that helps also."

Amanda said although they've each had a few friends the other didn't like, it's never been an issue.

'We respect each other enough to tolerate each other's friends," Amanda said. "We hang out with the same group, so having friends over has never been an issue."

Another thing Amanda said hasn't been an issue is money. She said that for a lot of roommates. money matters become the cause of many arguments.

"We're a little more likely to help each other out. However, if there is a problem, we are able to be a little more brutal and honest." Amanda Jenny and Amanda's living situation will be much different next year. The two will continue to live together; however, six of their friends will join them.

"It was time for a change, but we wanted to continue to live together," Amanda said.

Siblings face many more ups and downs than friends do, but Jenny said that is what makes their relationship strong.

"When you're young and at home, there's always family situations that cause fights between siblings," Jenny said. "But even if I wasn't Amanda's sister, I'd still be her friend."

The main factor in leaving the team actually was hard to name, Brønnenberg said.

"It's very difficult to pinpoint this, and I've been asked over the past couple of days on numerous occasions what my motives are for this and what drove me to this," she said, "and all I can really say is my change is based on personal reasons, and I don't While Bronnenberg's release from K-State is final, her plans for next year are not, and Bronnenberg would not expand upon them.

"I've looked into some things, but the release just happened earlier this week, so there's a little closure that needs to happen here, and obviously, I need to concentrate on the next two weeks of school," she said.

Nonetheless, with the final signing date of Aug. I approaching. Bronnenberg has little time to find a new school. She isn't worried, however.

"This is a late start. Obviously, people have already signed their recruits for next year, but I think I'll be all right," she said. "I think I will find what I'm looking for."

Local bands perform at concert

Kansas State Collegian

Crowds of funseekers converged on the Haymaker Hall lawn Saturday to get a glimpse of their favorite bands and to take in some sun.

The fourth annual Haylapalooza, sponsored by the Haymaker Hall Governing Board, took place all day Saturday. The event, which began in 1998, is designed as a day of performances by local bands, games, activities and food. The money made from food and T-shirt sales went to the Wonder Workshop Children's Museum.

Trent Smith, freshman in pre-medicine and Haymaker second-floor president, spent the day sitting above a dunk tank, taunting passersby. "It's tons of fun," Smith said. "I can't get enough of it.

I wish this lasted more than one day." Smith said he didn't mind being a dunk-tank target due to the weather. Temperatures peaked in the mid-80s during the course of the afternoon.

"Getting dunked is the best thing you can do on a hot day like this," he said.

Chad Johnson, Junior in management information systems, said he was there to listen to the bands. The lineup included Phat Albert, Elemental, Headfold, Egomaniacs and Ruskabank.

"It's very interesting. I'm just enjoying the music," he said. "Elemental is awesome."

Brandon Kidwell, Haymaker HGB president and sophomore in political science, said he thought the crowd was steady this year.

They've been sticking around a lot longer than last year," Kidwell said. "Last year, they just came and went. It's more consistent now."

Crowds stayed for the activities as well. Sand volleyball, Jell-O wrestling and shooting craps with giant dice were just among a few of the ways people could entertain themselves throughout the day.

Some people at Haylapalooza, however, were disappointed at the absence of a few of their favorite activities that had been there in years past.

Gone was the popular giant Twister game, as well as Battle Sports, an activity in which participants could do battle with weapons made out of duct tape and other

Kirk Tiedeman, former K-State student, said Battle Sports was the sole reason he came to Haylapalooza. Tiedeman made a two-hour trip from DeSoto, Kan., in anticipation of it and even made some of his own

"Women united will never be defeated."

- "Take Back the Night" chant

A group of women marched down Aggleville on their way to City Park for the "Take Back the Night" rally Friday night. The rally started outside the K-State Student Union, and the group of women made their way to City Park, chanting numerous sayings supporting nonviolence toward women.

March, rally unites women

By NANCY HULL Kansas State Collegian

The fire will not consume us. We'll take it and make it our own. Women chanted these words to begin the march from the K-State Union Plaza to City Park on Friday night during the "Take Back the Night" march and The chant was inspired by a speech given by Holly Burmeister, K-State alumna and executive director of a battered women's center in Georgia.

Burmeister compared standing up for women's rights to eating fire.

"Sometimes you have to do something that frightens you, do something even if you're afraid," Burmeister said.

There are everyday activities women can do to eat fire in a sense, she said.

"There are always dangerous things coming out at you. When you hear sexist or derogatory comments on the radio, say, 'That's not OK.' And call the station, and tell them that it does matter," she said. "Tell them you won't take part in the segregation of women, and you won't stand for it."

She emphasized that silence will not protect

"We're all going to die anyway. So do we want to die on our knees or on our feet?" she asked.

"All of us tonight are choosing on our feet tonight. Everyone here is doing some eating fire tonight by saying violence against women must stop, and it must stop today," Burmeister said to a crowd full of cheers before she and members of Ordinary Women, the K-State group that organized the event for the second year, literally swallowed fire in the Union

Only women were allowed to march, but men were invited to rally and cheer before and after the

Brian Lilley, member of K-State's Men Against Rape Society, said he went to the rally because he thinks women's issues need to be supported by women and men.

"We're just trying to raise awareness among our friends," he said. "There's not enough guys here." Those attending the night's events might have been a larger crowd than the 500 people who attended last year, said Michele Janette, Ordinary Women founding member and professor of English.

"Take Back the Night" marches have been in Manhattan for years, but Ordinary Women began organizing it last year.

The visual sight of a large group of women is very significant, Janette said.

"There are numbers of times big crowds get together for social events and athletic events. But seldom do people get together for progressive social change," she said.

"It's a reminder of the pro-feminist significance in this town," Janette said. "It's fantastic to see hundreds of women celebrating the fact that they're women."

The women marched from campus, through Aggieville and to City Park, beating on drums,

The amendment aims at restoring state university base budgets and fully funding promised faculty salary increases.

"From the faculty's perspective, we desperately need a base university budget and full funding of the Senate Bill 3-45," Mickey Ransom, Faculty Senate president, said. "That is good news if it happens.

Yet it is too early to become exuberant over the amendment.

Sunday marks Bush's 100th day in office

■ Conservatives praise president for bringing civility back to Washington.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Top aides to President Bush marked his 100th day in office Sunday by declaring he'd brought new civility to policy debates in Washington. Democrats dismissed the claim and aired ads bitterly attacking Bush as a captive of special interests.

"We don't talk, we don't negotiate, we don't really collaborate and work together on these policies," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo. "It's really been more of the same - my way or the highway, in the Congress every day on every High-ranking administration officials took to the airwaves bearing a different message: that Bush had delivered on his promise to improve the tone in the nation's capital. The president has changed the way Washington talks about its job," said White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card on ABC's "This Week." "Civility is back in Washington, and Democrats and Republicans can have a disagreement without being disagreeable, and that means that we can get work done for the American people." As evidence, Bush political adviser Karl Rove said the president had successfully pushed for a major tax-cut package.

"The support is growing for the president's initiative, and it's growing in the halls of Congress and across the country," Rove said on NBC's "Meet

Asked why the Senate had approved a tax cut of $1.2 trillion over a decade, far short of Bush's proposed $1.6 trillion plan, Rove said: "We're going to get a significant tax cut, a big tax cut, when a year ago people said we ain't going to get it, and three months ago, 97 or 98 days ago, people were counseling us to toss it overboard."

The Bush aides faced tough questioning on Bush's policies on the environment and consumerprotection laws, and even Sen. John Breaux, a Louisiana Democrat who has emerged as a Bush ally, was critical of Bush's leadership on the environment.

"I think they've handled it fairly badly," said Breaux. "I think they scared a lot of American people, and that's certainly not good for anyone."

Vice president rejects pope's clemency request

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Vice President Dick Cheney rejected Pope John Paul II's request that President Bush spare Timothy McVeigh's life, saying Sunday that the Oklahoma City bomber should be put to death.

"I think if there was ever a man who deserves to be executed it's probably Timothy McVeigh." Cheney said on "Fox News Sunday."

McVeigh, 33, is scheduled to be executed by lethal injection May 16 in Terre Haute, Ind., for the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City. The blast killed 168 people, including 19 children.

Bush received a letter last week from John Paul in which the pope made his clemency request. Legal scholars said it appeared the president had no way to intervene in the execution, even if he were inclined to. Bush supports capital punish-

A White House spokeswoman said Friday that Bush had no intention of trying to grant clemency.

"The president has great respect for the pope, and this is a tragic situation. The president, also, has deep compassion and sympathy for the 168 victims of the Oklahoma City bombing and their families." Claire Buchan, spokeswoman, said.

Cheney went further on Sunday: "I think that'd be a mistake," when asked about the administration's view on the pope's request.

"To now talk about an investigation, it seems to me, is just the wrong way to go," Sen. John Kerry. D-Mass., told ABC's "This Week." "If the Pentagon asked me, I'd say no."

Kerrey, the former Nebraska governor and senator, and five other former members of his Navy SEAL team said in a written statement released over the weekend that what happened on the night of Feb. 25, 1969, at Thanh Phong "was a defining and tragic moment for each of us."

Hollywood preparing for possible writers strike

LOS ANGELES - Here's a real cliffhanger for the end of the TV season: Will any of your favorite comedies and dramas return in time for the fall season?

With a contract deadline looming at midnight Tuesday for Hollywood writers, the fate of scripted television shows and movies hangs in the balance.

If the writers walk out, the first victims would be daily soap operas and late-night variety shows, followed by sitcoms and hour-long dramas if a strike drags on.

"It might be the winter season. before the public starts seeing a lot of new shows," said Doug Lieblein, a writer-producer on the CBS comedy "Yes, Dear."

Studio officials and leaders of the Writers Guild of America are engaged in last-minute negotiations aimed at closing a nearly $100 million gap in their demands.

Both sides have said they are willing to compromise - but only a little.

Walkout fears have strained Hollywood for months, with studios preparing for a dead zone in production by rushing film shoots and trying, mostly in vain, to stockpile scripts.

Not only is Tuesday the last day of the writers union's contract for its 11,000 members, but agreements for the two performers' unions - the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists - expire June 30.

FESTIVAL OF WORDS

Storytelling festival raises money for scholarships

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

An ugly couple fell in love Friday.

Or at least they did in the story Lovell Wilkerson told to a group of third graders at the Wonder Workshop Children's Museum Storytelling Festival on

"I write all my stories myself," said Wilkerson, graduate student in education administration. "Most of them are fun, but they always have an underlying theme that gets a message across to my listeners. Stories are a good medium to take a serious message and bring it to a level that children will understand."

The festival, designed to raise money for the museum's scholarship program, featured several storytellers, along with other activities, including juggling, karaoke, face painting and magic

"It has been absolutely successful," said Richard Pitts, executive director of the museum. "I am a storyteller myself, and I thought this project would have an interest among community members because people of all ages love hearing stories."

Linda Mathews, a third-grade teacher at Lee Elementary School, brought her class to the festival for the day.

"It has been great," she said. "It is a fun way for the children to see a variety of storytelling and gain a sense of community at the same time.

Mathews' class is studying fairy tales in their literature section.

"It is a great way to expand on that," she said, "because the children get to hear the story teller live, not just read from

Food education topic of meeting

Farm Bureau addresses importance of educating children on food growth.

By STEFANIE HOWARD Kansas State Collegian

Many young children might believe our primary food source is the grocery store. Kansas Farm Bureau's second annual Ag Pizza Party on Friday, though, addressed the issue of educating children on where food comes from Susan Reid-Shipman, team coordinator of the event, said many children do not realize there is a process that takes place when producing the food people eat. "The importance of this event is to educate the children - to let them know where their food is actually coming from." Reid-Shipman said.

More than 500 fourth-graders from the Manhattan/Ogden USD 383 School District, Flint Hills Christian School and Seven Dolors Grade School attended the event.

Along with eating pizza, the students rotated to seven exhibits that illustrated how a pizza is made.

Ingredients produced on farms, such as corn for the crust, meat for the toppings, vegetables for the sauce and dairy products were explained to the students.

Taking a food that most students enjoy makes it easier for students to understand the process of where the ingredients come from, Reid-Shipman said.

"We went with pizza because the ingredients used are produced from Kansas farms," Reid-Shipman said.

Students then watched Rex Getz, the magician, and his magical world of agriculture act.

Outside, students were able to go to seven exhibits that featured important livestock - such as pigs, cows and sheep.

Farm machinery, exhibits and presentations on field burning and a class photo with Kansas Farm Bureau's mascot, Freddy the Bureau Combine, were available as well.

Each student was given a miniature loaf of bread to take home, and each class received a tomato plant

Janel Frownfelter, senior in elementary education and student aide at Woodrow Wilson School, said the children learned a lot.

"There is information on facts such as how many kids a Kansas farmer feeds, land and field erosion, and jobs in the agricultural field," Frownfelter said.

The Kansas Farm Bureau sent all fourth-grade classrooms a red barn filled with lesson plans, information and materials needed to grow soy beans, wheat and corn in the classroom, Frownfelter said.

Karen Franz, fourth-grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said her students have shown a growing interest in the information they have learned.

"The children have been asking many questions about what they have seen and learned," Franz said. "It has added to the information that we have learned in the classroom to be here and see it come to life." Reid-Shipman said she hopes the Ag Pizza Party becomes an annual event. This year, she said almost 200 more students participated in the event.

Organizations such as the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, Kansas Beef Council, Kansas Dairy Association and Kansas Soybean Association gave presentations to the students.

Franz said she wants her class to return next year.

"This was so well-organized and interesting. The students had a great time," Franz said.

The parking lot only will be in existence for five years, but it is a sign of even better things to come. The lot will have the necessary security measures such as lights. emergency phones and security cameras. Parking Services often takes a lot of grief from upset students, so when they do something such as this, in terms of trying to make a difference, it should be acknowledged and appreciated.

End of winter brings about hope, chance to renew spirit here it is, the end of another semester When I sat down to first column in January, I never would have believed that this, this last week of classes, would come. My first column, Seize the Day, was written at a time of immeasurable grief and sorrow in my life. I remember sitting in the newsroom, typing away, wiping tears away from my face. As the snow fell to the frozen ground outside the window. I was wondering just how was I ever going to make it through the rest of

At that point in the semester, I felt like an eternal winter was inevitable.

I felt like every day would be a day of coldness and darkness. It seemed like every time I left the house, it was only to trudge through piles of sleet and slush. I was cold. My feet were cold, my fingers were cold, my nose was cold. I was frozen from the inside out. And as the sky grew darker and the days continued to shorten. it seemed like every time I turned on the weather channel, the only thing the forecaster would say was, "More of the same tomorrow ... More of the same

As is with life. At some point, almost everyone has found themselves seemingly trapped in the middle of winter, with nothing to look forward to but more of the

Everyone has tried to deal with more hours of darkness than they really know how to handle. Everyone has trudged through the proverbial snow and sleet, not being able to lift up their feet, merely sliding along on the ice of life. Everyone has gotten up on those bitter cold early February mornings, looked out the window across the darkened land and wondered, "How am I ever going to make it through this?"

But having no other choice but to accept the winter for what it sometimes is: cold, dark and bitter, we get up anyway, we get dressed, and we leave our houses anyway, slipping and sliding with frozen toes, holding onto the promise of spring that is hibernating soundly in our hearts.

And suddenly, at some point when our eyes are closed, spring does arrive. We never know how it is going to come or when it is going to come.

But sometime in the middle of the night as the Old North Wind blows, it just keeps on blowing, and blowing, until all the coldness, all the bitterness, and all the frigidness and darkness are replaced by a warm and gentle breeze ... and spring finally has arrived. The land becomes fresh, the grass grows greener, the birds begin singing and the sun shines its hopeful rays again. Spring has sprung.

So here I am, sitting in the newsroom, once again, for the final time this semester. And there are all of you. It is nice to see people walking across campus, each with a little bounce in their steps. Or see people lying on the grass between buildings, with their faces turned upwards to the sky, soaking in the warmth of the sun.

Perhaps this is what spring is all about. The freshness, the newness, the warmth. Spring is our reward for making it through the bitter winter months. Hope has been renewed. Everything winter has taken away from us soon will be replenished by the spring Though losses never can be replaced, our hurts can be healed. The winter will never take away more than the spring can provide. Sorrows never will cause a pain that the dawning of new life cannot eventually As flowers pop their new heads out of the fresh earth and their brightly colored petals begin to open, each and every one of us has the chance to do the same. Unfold the petals that have been protectively closed all winter. Soften your hearts that might have been chapped and dried by the winter wind. Revel in the miracle of life that is beginning all around you.

Spring is here. Winter is over. The sun is shining, and life is improving. We made it again, fellow students. At times, it might have seemed impossible, but here we are, at the end of another semester, and we have made it again. Spring has arrived, darkness and coldness has subsided, and we have made it again. And even if at times we didn't know if we could, or even how we should, we have made it again. Spring definitely has sprung.

Forgiveness distributed for undeserving

All the good folks who never found a reason to hate Bill Clinton during his administration had their nerves tested one last excruciating time when, moments before leaving office, he pardoned an inexplicable number of guilty parties. Was the gesture a middle finger flown in the face of the American populace that made his life so difficult? Who cares?

It's so much nicer to go out in a flourish of forgiveness rather than one of damnation.

I had to be a copycat, but for my last column, I feel inspired to offer a few similar random acts of forgiveness. Five years at K-State have included a veritable police line-up of parties in need of redemption. Therefore, I hereby pardon the following (in random order, as even the scales of justice can't measure who among them needs it the

Max Urick. How have we been offended by thee? Let us count the ways. Besides spearheading the conspiracy to make football K-State's only export (even at the sacrifice of other athletics), there was the effort to make students pay for stadium expansion and the subsequent guilt trip that followed when we refused. The bumbling mishandling of Tom Asbury is a cherished memory, and, lest we forget, the militant student ID rule that inconvenienced every fake ID maker in town. His recent Nixonesque resignation was more than a little suspicious, so we'd better make this pardon retroactive, just in case.

President Jon Wefald. All in all, his behavior hasn't been objectionable enough to warrant a pardon. That is, if you're a Pepsi Cola drinker. My Coca-Cola addiction has made the last two years with the "Joy of Cola" a hellish nightmare. Soda selection definitely will be a paradigm when choosing a graduate school.

Russell Fortmeyer and Sam Sackett. Anyone old enough to remember these two former Collegian columnists probably was offended by them more than once. Sackett was a flagrant, browbeating Christian with tunnel vision, while the elitist Fortmeyer fancied himself K-State's foremost critic of everything from restaurants to architecture. They both were fine writers, but put together, they offered something to piss off everybody.

Fred Phelps. Normally, I wouldn't do this, but let's face it: nobody needs it more. He's been making a spectacle of himself ever since I can remember, which means he's probably getting really old. Which means he's probably going to die soon. So what the hell?

Steve Balderson. Somehow, this local independent filmmaker has managed to make more enemies than he has local independent films. While in of Nichols Hall. Everybody has a Wamego shooting his first feature, the unsubtle "Pep Squad," the CalArts dropout eventually belittled everyone in the region who didn't know the difference between a breve and a latte. He later went on to trash the good people of Manhattan on his unsubtle Web site dikenga.com. The next project of this rebel without a thesaurus ("Firecracker") begins principle photography soon, so hopefully, he'll take his clean slate and keep it clean.

Rick Wooten. Despite three earnest attempts at revolution, this folksy antihero was never able to make himself Public Enemy No. 1. His grassroots campaigns (which always felt more influenced by grass than by roots) ultimately never were scandalous enough to make the grade. Don't worry, Rick. You'll always be a gangsta to me.

The K-State Student Union. Two words: Missing sculptures.

The guys on the Men Against Rape Society poster. Maybe it would be less irritating if the poster weren't so omnipresent on campus. Or if most of the faces on the poster truly were active in MARS rather than just faces. Or if they ever had anything else to do with other feminist causes on campus. Maybe next year.

Gov. Bill Graves. That's OK, Gov. We weren't really going to spend it on anything important anyway. No prob.

Parking Services and the haughty person with the 24-hour space outside parking story. Here's mine: Not realizing I'd parked in an illegal spot, I was towed at 9 p.m., when even the scary dogs at Mike's Wrecker Service had gone to sleep. It wouldn't have been so bad if my friend's birthday cake hadn't been in the car, and had I not planned to surprise her with it later that night in front of 200 people at Midnight Madness and had Mike's Wrecker Service not refused to let me into the car because it was after business hours. I guess you can't have your cake and ... screw it.

Leonard Peltier. This American political prisoner is so good at his job that even Clinton didn't pardon him, which would have been worth it just to get all those stoners to take the "Free Leonard Peltier" bumper stickers off of their Volkswagens.

Carmike Cinemas. 'Nuff said. So that's about everybody. Hindsight is 20/20, which is why pardons are so rarely issued in the middle of a term. The closer we get to our diplomas, the clearer our vision gets. Mine is so close I almost can taste it, which is why it finally seems to me that we all could use a little forgiveness.

So if you'll please pardon me, I'm outta here.

American Indians from Kansas and Oklahoma gathered at Ahearn Field House on Saturday night for the Annual Heritage Month Spring Pow Wow to end Native American Heritage Month at K-State.

The event included a grand entry of dancers, intertribal dancing and several dance contests, including a men's traditional dance and a grass dance.

Josh Williamson, the arena director for the powwow, said the grass dance is the oldest style of dancing. It originated in the northern part of the United States. Before there were lawn mowers, the American Indians would heat down the grass with their feet.

Today, that same motion is used in the grass dance style.

The Native American Student Body crowned the 2000 Pow Wow Princess, Christian Fay Goodson. Tables were set up with hand-crafted jewelry, clothing and pottery.

Team defeats Missouri in 2nd sweep of season

K-State's J.D. Loudabarger turns a double play against Missouri's Jon Williams in the fifth inning of the Wildcats' 10-5 win over the Tigers on Sunday. The Wildcats swept the threegame weekend series from the Tigers, Improving their record to 24-22. MIKE SHEPHERD/

By DAN SMITH Kansas State Collegian

They did it again. One week after sweeping the UCLA Bruins, and two weeks removed from another series win against the Oklahoma Sooners, the magic returned to Manhattan for K-State's date with the Missouri Tigers from Frank Myers Field.

K-State's (24-22, 9-15) second sweep of the season couldn't have come at a better time, either. Left off the Big 12's short list of tournament invitees coming into Friday's opener, the Cats let Missouri (27-20-1. 10-17) know just how scrappy a team with its back against the wall could be in game one.

'We're just a blue-collar ballclub," head coach Mike Clark said after K-State's 15-4 win over Missouri on Friday. "We may not be the prettiest team, but we'll fly around there and play hard, and that's why we always have a chance."

Paced by junior Luke Robertson's second complete game of the year and an offensive explosion that resulted in seven runs in both the third and fifth innings, K-State earned its first win over the Tigers in the Little Apple since 1996.

"Gosh, we have guys playing with all heart," Robertson said. "For us, that's huge because that's what we're riding on right now. Guys are just coming out and getting the job done and doing whatever it takes to win."

Robertson improved to 6-5 on the year after striking out eight Tigers on the day. First baseman Mark English had a big day as well, leading a group of four K-State hitters with at least two hits. The senior found a way out of his slump with a two-run homerun off Tiger starter Shaun Marcum in the third and finished the day with three RBI.

"It was nice," he said. "It's been a while, and I feel like I've been letting everybody down, so it was nice to get a big hit like that. It's been frustrating."

Game two was another chance for the Cats to make a statement, and with Missouri ace Matt Hobbs on the mound, K-State looked convincing.

Hobbs surrendered seven runs on seven hits to the Cats and walked five batters in just 5 1/3 innings of work as K-State cruised to its second straight win over Missouri, 7-3.

Sophomore Kevin Melcher earned the win after going seven innings and striking out four. Scott Tallman continued his dominance from the mound as well, relieving Melcher in the eighth and allowing just one bit in two shutout innings to finish the Tigers

"I kind of laugh, but it's just what I'm supposed to do, to be honest," Tallman said, "That's my job come out of the pen and don't let anybody score."

The knockout blow was delivered Sunday, though, off the bats of three Wildcats in the third inning.

Tennis team defeated by Texas A&M

■ Wildcats eliminated on Friday from Big 12 Tournament at Waco.

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's tennis team was eliminated from the Big 12 Tournament by No. 14 Texas A&M on Friday at Waco, Texas.

The No. 14 Aggies used wins at No. 2, No. 4 and No. 6 singles to defeat No. 51 K-State, 4-1 in the quarterfinals.

It was the second loss to to the Aggies in less than a week, as A&M won 4-3 on April 21 in Manhattan.

Texas A&M now is 6-0 all-time against

Just as in last week's match, A&M's Leah Killen clinched the team victory as she deleated junior Kathy Chuda, 6-4, 7-5, at No. 4 singles. Chuda led 5-4 in the second set, but Killen broke Chuda's serve to go ahead 6-5 and then served out the match.

Texas A&M's first singles win came when Roberta Spencer defeated freshman Natasha Boyko, 6-2, 6-2, at No. 6. K-State bounced back, however, with a win at No. 3 as Eva Novotna' knocked off No. 94 Olivia Karlikova, 6-2, 6-3.

While the senior was happy with the upset. the team's loss was more important.

"I've been playing well, and I felt confident," Novotna' said. "I'm very disappointed, but we can't forget what we did all year. Today we wanted to beat A&M."

Texas A&M won No. 2 singles behind No. 78 Jessica Roland, who defeated sophomore Petra Sedlmajerova, 6-1, 6-3. Roland jumped out to a 5-0 lead in the first set and 5-1 in the second to roll to the win.

The first of the Aggies four points came from doubles play.

Novotna' and junior Alena Jecminkova won at No. 1, 8-1, but Ashley Hedberg and Martina Nedorostova won, 8-6 at No. 2, and Eva Marcial and Karlkova clinched the point with an 8-6 win at No. 3.

K-State has struggled in recent matches to win the doubles point, but actually played better Friday despite the loss, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"We played better in doubles and still couldn't get the point," he said. "It was just a really tight match."

With the win, Texas A&M improved to 20-4 on the year, while K-State dropped to 12-10.

Statement on Bronnenberg announced

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Head volleyball coach Jim McLaughlin released a statement Friday regarding the decision of senior setter Disney Bronnenberg to leave the team.

"We are obviously disappointed that Disney has chosen to leave the team," McLaughlin said. "However, she has some personal matters that she needs to attend to, and she cannot do that and play volleyball at Kansas State University. She indicated to me that these personal matters were more of an academic nature than anything else.

"We appreciate her contributions over the last three years, and we wish her nothing but the best in her future plans."

Although Bronnenberg requested a transfer from the K-State compliance office, she did not indicate her plans.

Varsity team places 3rd in Big 12 Invitational

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Varsity 8+ boat finished third at the Big 12 Invitational at Tuttle Creek Reservoir on Saturday.

With a time of 6:35.8, the Cats were less than a second behind second place Tulsa (6:34.9). Texas won the race in a time of 6:26.6. Rival Kansas placed fourth with a time of 6:40.0;

While Texas ended up outdistancing the field by over eight seconds, K-State actually kept its own against the 20th ranked team in the country for much of the race, novice coach Kevin Harris said.

"I think the team did really well, especially the first time in conference competition. We were even with or ahead of Texas for most of that race vesterday, and they're just a bigger, stronger team and took it from us," he said, "Tulsa and us have raced back and forth all season, and they all have been getting a lot of votes in the collegiate coaches

The K-State novices also showed well. The Cats' Novice Lightweight 4+ placed second with a time of 8:17.0. while the Second Novice 8+ boat finished third by rowing a time of 7:13.6.

K-State's overall performance accentuated the team's progress throughout the spring season. On March 17, after spending just one week in the water, Texas crushed the Cats by more than 13 seconds at the Texas Invitational. On Saturday, K-State cut five seconds off that "We feel really good because this is a very, very young team. We only have two seniors on a team of 52 women," Harris said. "We've learned a lot this season, and I think the team has really come back from some hard circumstances that hit us early like the weather.'

The invitational was K-State's first home event since March 12, 2000.

Being able to have the home fans around us is awesome," Harris said. "We saw a lot of people up on the dam and at the finish line, and one thing I think the team would like to put out to the Kansas State community is just how awesome they've been for us this year for various fundraisers and through this race."

K-State will return to the water May 11-13, when it competes at the Central Division Sprints in Oakridge, Tenn.

Unbalanced baseball schedule advantageous for some

If you follow Major League Baseball, you might have noticed something very.

Going into Sunday's meeting with the Baltimore Orioles, the Minnesota Twins are 16-6 and leading the American League Central. Yeah, the Twins - a franchise that has lost more than 90 games in each of the four seasons. Many people figured the Twins were as dead as Costello's Pizza.

Who or what is to thank for this great start? No, Kirby Puckett and Kent Hrbek didn't come out of retirement.

You can thank baseball's new unbalanced schedule. It's designed to restore emphasis on divisional rivalries by having teams in the same division play each other at least six more times a year. Since 1979, all American League teams have played each other just about the same number of times (it's been that way in the National League since 1993).

This year each team plays just about half of its 162 games against teams in its division.

So, the Twins played their first 17 games against A.L. Central foes, going 14-3. The only other team in the Central with a winning record is Cleveland. Since then (going into Sunday) the Twins are 2-3 against Boston and Baltimore, of the A.L. East.

The new schedule has been advantageous for the Twins, as it has kept them away from New York, Toronto and Seattle so far. We'll see how good the Twins are when they play the Yankees this week.

Conversely, the Royals' first 18 games fed them Twins, Toronto and New York. Needless to say, the Royals got knocked around a bit, going 6-12. Here's the good news for the Royals though they are done with the Yankees and Blue Jays and only have three games left with Boston. The Twins, however, still have 15 games to play against the big boys of the A.L. East,

Even though it hasn't worked out great for the Royals, I like the unbalanced schedule. I think it will do what it was designed to do - make the games between the teams in the same division more meaningful. This, in turn, will help develop rivalries between division foes. For example, when you think of rivalries, Montreal-New York doesn't really spring to mind. But, a few weeks ago Mets' reliever Turk Wendell plunked Montreal's Vladimir Guerrero with a pitch in retaliation for swinging at a 3-0

BLAND entertainment

Vampire movie shows predictable plot, lacks redeeming value, interest

Basically, "The Forsaken" has got to be one of the worst vampire movies ever made.

Some movies you can take as guilty pleasures, knowing completely that the movie has no redeeming value, but It sure is fun to watch.

"Lost Boys" and "Blade" both come to mind.

"Forsaken" doesn't even qualify as a guilty pleasure. It's just too bland. The previews were more entertaining.

Sean (Kerr Smith, "Final Destination") is driving an expensive car to Florida for a wealthy divorcee. He is told distinctly not to pick up any hitch-hikers. Of course, his car breaks down and he ends up giving a hitcher named Nick (Brendan Fehr, "Final Destination") who just happens to be a vampire hunter, a ride. The two of them pick up

> Megan (Izabella Miko, "Coyote Ugly") who is on her way to turning into a vampire with the intention of destroying the one who

If the plot sounds thin, that's because it is. So is the script and the acting won't be getting any awards either. Even the gore is dull. Just because they stick a Coal Chamber song in with a little of the killing doesn't make it any more exciting bit her.

Writer and director, LS. Cardonne, completely ignored plot and character development for poorly done chase and shoot-out scenes. Kit (Ionathon Schaech) is one of the world's original eight vampires, a French knight from the first Crusade. This could have actually been an interesting angle if it were developed, but instead there is nothing French about him and the few lines he is given are just bad one-liners.

The only actor that makes his character at all interesting is Fehr with his jaded slacker version of a vampire hunter. Besides that, characters just sort of say whatever lines are written out for them, except for the female vampires who over act so much they belong in a carnival haunted

The soundtrack is decent for nu-metal lans and, maybe, Cardonne just wanted to make a gory music video for some metal songs. If so, Mudvayne is already duing a better job.

makes comedy

I'm ending the semester on a good note.

Thus, "One Night at McCool's." The film is the story of Jewel Valentine (Liv Tyler, "Armageddon"), a woman who makes it a point to sleep with as many men as possible.

Three men fall captive to her charm: a poverty-stricken bartender (Matt Dillon, "There's Something About Mary"), a policeman (John Goodman of the "Roseanne" TV series)

lawyer (Paul Reiser, of TV's "Mad About You"). Throughout the course of one evening, Tyler's character manages to ruin their lives, and a murder is at the center of it all.

Finally, the humor in this movie is somewhat better than the rest of the "comedies" out right now. While it is obvious that the movie belongs to Tyler (serving as eye candy to those of you who get bored with the plot). the star-studded cast makes the movie more than worthwhile. In addition to the main players. Michael Douglas, Reba McEntire and Andrew Dice Clay round out the cast very well.

The cast does the best they can with the somewhat contrived plot they've been given. If you can ignore the lack of plot (as I know many people can), you'll at least enjoy the cast and the excellent cinematography - the striking colors and camera angles make each shot enter-

Thus, Tyler rules the movie, and hopefully, this will be a springboard for more opportunities for her to star in comedies, since most of her career has been composed of dramas and

If not, she still has the "Lord of the Rings" trilogy (the first installment will be released this December) that should more than mark her place as an upand-coming star.

"Cassiopia"

ALBUM REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

The Hurchinson-based foursome, Cassiopia, has made good on an anticipated debut album chock full of metal riffs, lush vocals and foreboding lyrics.

Cassiopia comes across with a tight sound on "Apex Predator," with an obvious chemistry that makes the band work together to sound like a well oiled machine. Local music enthusiasts will be hard pressed to name a recent Kansas band with such a hard sound that is pulled off so well.

The real talent of the band is obvious in every song. Guitarist Randy Carrier rips into tracks like "Worth the Time" with sawtoothed riffs against the dark sound of Brody Wellman's bass. Unlike some hard-edged bands, vocalist Brian Woods hits all the right notes with a jaded sound that will unavoidably get him compared to Maynard James Keenan of Tool.

Still, the band is more than a Tool rip-off. and their sound is pretty much new territory for Kansas music,

Cassiopia keeps the long track times interesting with plenty of dynamics, change-ups and solos, so the five minute and over tracks don't get old. Interestingly enough though, the song that instantly stands out as single material, "Mychaena" is an outlier, clocking in at just under three minutes.

A few of the weaker tracks run the risk of sounding too much alike, which is an easy slip for a band that sticks so closely to its sound. That doesn't diminish the overall quality of the album though.

Lyrically, the album holds up under scratiny with tracks like "Worth the Time" when Woods moans the words "Tears stain a pillow / Cradled deep in my arms / An effigy of her next to me." Then Woods proves he can write a carchy, yet dark, chorus on Mychaena" with the climactic sound of his voice as he sings "I can't understand why you push this inside of me / What do you want from my pain? / No there ain't nothin' left / You've taken it all away / So why have you comearound again?" "Apex Predator" is eight solid tracks of sound. If you have any interest in local music, or you just like well done and tonal metal, this is an album to check out.

Jardine looking at number of renovations to improve quality

By ALYSON RALETZ

Kansas State Collegian

Plans for an updated version of the Jardine Terrace Apartments still are in its beginning stages

The university is examining its housing situation and structures to help assess the living needs of the university in the next 20 years, Stephanie Bannister, coordinator of Jardine, said.

Jardine offers on-campus housing to families and non-traditional students. Wiley Apartments, a division of Jardine, is available to undergraduate students, and William's Place is available to graduate students.

"When we first opened up Wiley in 1997 to undergraduate students and saw that demand, we knew there was a greater need than we ever realized," Bannister said.

Wiley and William's Place are at 100-percent occupancy, she said. Waiting lists already have started for next year.

She said she is excited about the opportunity to improve the quality of life the university can offer to its students. What was built in 1957, she said, does not meet the needs of the family of 2001. No concrete decisions, however, have been

"We are truly at a constant point," she said. "We have no set drawing points. What we are dreaming about is truly creating a neighborhood community."

While large improvement plans are in the distant future, smaller renovations are continuing in the current complex. Kitchen renovations, painting and roof work are some of the projects in progress.

Donna Frazier, junior in dietetics, has been a Jardine resident for almost two semesters. She used to manage a low-income apartment complex in her hometown, Lathrop, Mo.

"After a first glance, I really thought Jardine was low-income housing," Frazier said. "But after living here, my impression has definitely changed because of its strong community. It is definitely not low-income housing by any means."

The diversity of the residents is what makes it such a unique community, said Paula Wedel, lardine resident assistant and senior in dietetics. Many out-of-state and international students choose to. live in the complex because it is easy to meet other people there, Wedel said.

"There's diversity in the traditional residence halls, but there is a whole lot more here," she said. "The people you live with generally are not from the same country you are."

Some people, though, do not appreciate its diversity, she said. She said there is a common stereotype she encounters when she deals with non-Jardine residents.

539-3333

"I've heard people say, 'This is where all the Asians live. Only Asians live here," she said. "That's not true. There are people from many cultures living here, and there are also lots of residents from all over the United States, too."

Frazier said she always feels safe in her apartment because the community is so active. There always is some type of activity going on, she said, and there always are neighbors

"I can't imagine feeling this safe anywhere else," she said.

Unlike many off-campus housing options, Jardine staff members inspect each apartment monthly primarily for pest management, but also to make sure there are no safety

"I hope this shows our primary concern is the health and safety of our residents," Bannister said. "We can provide people with the apartment opportunity, but our commitment to K-State students makes it a greater living experience."

Bush to present defense plan

By ROBERT BURNS

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The missile defense favored by President Bush - a shield of global reach rather than covering only U.S. territory - bears a striking resemblance to the approach his father's Pentagon was pursuing a decade ago. The Clinton administration quickly killed it.

Bush will outline his intentions for missile defense in a speech Tuesday that aides say will link the concept to his desire for substantial, perhaps unilateral reductions in the U.S. nuclear missile arsenal.

The question Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld has been mulling is how to go beyond the current missile defense approach that is focused on a land-based intercept system designed to protect just the 50 U.S. states.

One approach reported to be under consideration by Rumsfeld and Bush is known as a layered missile defense

It might combine the Clinton approach, which would use groundlaunched rockets to intercept missiles midway through flight, with sea- and space-based weapons that would make the intercept during the hostile missile's ascent phase, or while its rocket plume still was burning inside the atmosphere.

The result - if it worked would be a missile defense system with global reach.

Brig. Gen. Michael Hamel, director of space operations for the Air Force, said last week that he supports that approach.

More than 30 scientists and missile experts who oppose the administration's push for missile defense planned to gather at the Capitol on Wednesday to assert that the science of missile defense is too immature to justify moving ahead with a project expected to costs tens of billions of dollars.

The administration has made clear it will press ahead; when, at what cost and with what blueprint are the only questions.

How far-reaching a missile defense should be is a sensitive issue.

For one, it affects the degree of political support by Canada and U.S. allies in Europe. It also bears on the prohibitions against certain missile defenses spelled out in the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty.

The first Bush administration believed that with the demise of the Soviet Union, the emphasis in missile defense should shift from protection of the United States against an attack by thousands of nuclear missiles to protection of America and its allies against perhaps several dozen missiles of any origin.

It was called Global Protection Against Limited Strikes, or GPALS, and was made public at a Pentagon news conference Feb. 12, 1991.

The official who presented the $32 billion plan was Stephen J. Hadley - then an assistant secretary of defense, now a deputy national security adviser to Bush. The defense secretary at the time was Dick Cheney, now the vice Rumsfeld might come up with a different acronym, but the concept of global protection is likely to be a key aspect of whatever missile defense program the administration decides to pursue, in the view of many private analysts who follow the subject closely.

Legislature continues negotiations

By JOHN HANNA

The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Legislative negotiators were starting from scratch Sunday rather than trying to find a compromise between rival House and Senate plans for closing a $206 million budget gap.

Three senators and three House members have been appointed to draft the final version of the year's final budget bill. Their bill will reconcile expected revenues with spending for the state's 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

The joint conference committee met all day Saturday, but the two chambers had taken such different approaches to resolving the state's financial problems that the negotiators said Means Committee. it was like the plans were in different languages.

They abandoned the traditional negotiating process and started drafting a new plan, deciding first how much revenue they're willing to raise and how much money they'll need in the state's 2003 fiscal year.

The negotiators said they are working on both a fiscal 2002 budget and the outlines of a 2003 budget because it will do no good to resolve this year's problems and face similar or tougher budget problems next year, when the final 2003 budget is drafted.

"We're making progress," said Sen. Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, chairman of the Senate Ways and

Gov. Bill Graves has said he'll veto any legislative proposal that creates problems in fiscal 2003.

Legislators can help prospects for 2003 by keeping spending. down in fiscal 2002 and letting the savings build up in the state treasury.

They also can increase revenues. Graves proposed $117.6 million in tax increases to eliminate the budget hole and provide extra money for education.

But finding new revenues doesn't necessarily require a tax increase. The plans from both houses would step up collection of delinquent taxes and tap extrafederal nursing home funds, for example.

ost people wouldn't find hope in a gunshot to the stomach, but when death becomes an intrinsic part of daily life, it sometimes requires an extraordinary event to break a downward spiraling

The emotional battle began 17 months ago for K-State volunteer assistant baseball coach Chris Forbes.

In his first year as assistant baseball coach at Johnson County Community College, Forbes discovered a swollen lymph node in his neck, had it checked and was told he had Hodgkin's disease, cancer of the lymphatic system.

The news certainly was bad, especially at age 27, but there was a bright side to the situation, one that gave Forbes hope.

"Hodgkins disease — if you get cancer it's the cancer you want — 95-percent cure rate, radiation therapy, not chemotherapy, real easy." Forbes said.

But three weeks later, doctors made a discovery and prediction that made the disease much harder to endure.

"I got real sick. It got to be around late December that I started having flashes and headaches, and the doctors found that I had two brain tumors," Forbes said. "And Dec. 31, 1999, I was given three to six months to live.

"What you hear is what you have to believe, and there's nothing you can do about it at that point."

What Forbes did do about it was begin radiation therapy for the tumors.
Unfortunately, though, the treatment didn't

Summer business changes focus

By LYNNE HERMANSEN Kansas State Collegian

Summer draws a different crowd to Manhattan businesses.

Eileen Meyer, Streetside Records store director, said that after the students leave, the local community visits Aggieville.

"It is just a different business — a tradeoff," she said.

During the school year, students use the parking lots of Streetside Records and other Aggieville businesses for their classes.

"Older clients can't park, but with less students in the summer, there are more free places to park," Meyer said.

Streetside does not lose much business over the summer, she said, because the store does not order as much merchandise.

"We scale back — so we do not really lose anything," Meyer said. Special events are organized to keep Aggleville thriving in the hot summer months.

"There are sidewalk sales and an art festival. It's just the little things," she said.

Meyer said the summer gives her more time to do other things for Streetside. "There is more time for cleaning."

USD 383 to face budget cuts under finance bill

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 might lose about $425,500 in state aid under the terms of a school finance bill sent to legislative conference last week.

The bill contains a clause raising the base state aid per pupil from $3,780 up to $3,820 — a $50 per pupil hike called for by Gov. Bill Graves in January.

However, due to enrollment declines, the proposal would leave more than 130 districts with less state aid than in the current year. USD 383 received more than $24.9 million in state aid this year, but under this proposal, the local district only would receive $24.5 next year — a $432,502 cut — due to fewer students.

"We knew this would most likely be the case," Interim Superintendent Tom Hawk said, "because we saw a great reduction of students this year."

Hawk said the district is looking at cutting close to $1 million from its budget for the next school year.

"We are in the process of determining where is the best place," he said. "Right now, the focus is on staff because 80 percent of our budget is payroll."

The district already has notified around 50 employees that their contracts might not be renewed. Hawk said.

"Most of them are young teachers," he said. "We have to cut 25 to 27 positions. We are just not sure which ones would be the least damaging to the district. It is hard to make that determination."

Two area districts, Wamego and Riley County, would see an increase in

News of the Weird

Marcus Calhoun, 24, was taken to the county jail in Little Rock, Ark., on Jan. 29 on several misdemeanor charges, for which he would have been given citations and released after several hours paperwork and records checks. However, he became restless, and when he heard the jailer call the name of a man he knew was asleep in a back cell, he pretended to be that man and was released. Family members convinced him to turn himself in (at about the same hour he would have been released, anyway), but the result of his ruse is that he now faces a felony escape charge.

KSU professor invited to England to fight disease

A K-State professor will help England in its fight against footand-mouth disease

George Kennedy, professor of diagnostic medicine pathobiology, has been invited, along with other veterinarians, by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to travel to England. He will leave today and plans to work in the country for about a month.

"We are going to try to be of some help by diagnosing it. becoming educated on what it looks like, and learn from them if we were to ever get it here," he

The disease affects clovenhoofed animals and has been causing serious economic damage to the country since the end of February. Foot-and-mouth disease effects cows, sheep, pigs and deer, but not horses.

"It essentially does not affect humans - it is not a danger to us." Kennedy said.

Kennedy said the disease spreads very rapidly - through the air, animal feed, water or between animals.

"It is very contagious," he said. Most animals do not die, but Kennedy said cows with the disease are put out of milk production and never completely recover.

"It is economically devastating," he said. "So far about 1,500 farms have been affected and thousands of animals.

"It is important to try to keep it from spreading."

Kansas preparing to fight foot-and-mouth disease

TOPEKA - Foot-and-mouth disease has not been detected in U.S. livestock since 1929, but legislators and agriculture groups say Kansas should be prepared to contain an outbreak

A bill before the House would allow the governor to treat the highly contagious disease as a disaster and issue a quarantine or take any steps needed to prevent its spread.

The Senate passed the measure on a 40-0 vote Friday. House passage, which could come Monday, would send the bill to Gov. Bill Graves.

"When this becomes law, we will have done everything we can to prepare for an outbreak," Senate Agriculture Chairman Derek Schmidt said. "Then, it's hoping we'll never need it,"

Schmidt. R-Independence, said current state law is ambiguous as to who takes charge - the governor or the livestock commissioner - should the disease that has devastated farms in Europe ever hit Kansas.

Cows, pigs and other clovenhoofed infected with the disease develop sores on their feet and mouths. They do not eat or move, and eventually die.

Humans rarely contract the disease but can pick it up on their clothes and carry it from one country to another.

European officials in recent months have ordered the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of animals in response to an outbreak of foot-and-mouth, which is common in much of the world.

Leslie Kaufman, a lobbyist for Kansas Farm Bureau, said the European outbreak has focused attention on the state's ability to handle the disease.

"It is fitting for the state to examine actions that might be appropriate, even necessary," Kaufman said at a joint House and Senate Agriculture committee meeting.

Schmidt said the bill also would allow the state to access all available federal assistance. Current law says Kansas would pay half the expense in an animal disease outbreak.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture said Thursday it would pay fair market value for livestock killed to stop the spread of footand-mouth. The measure is meant to encourage farmers to report any signs of the disease.

The Kansas proposal also makes it felony for anyone to knowingly infect an animal with the disease. Supporters of the bill said the law could divert bioterrorists from bringing the disease to the state.

Finally, the bill bans feeding garbage to animals - which is one theory of how the disease started in Europe. Current law allows farmers and ranchers to feed animals garbage if they have a permit and if they cook it.

KSU engineers compete in Mini Baja West competition

Kansas State Collegian

Milford Lake served as a battleground this weekend for a war between its rough terrain and those who dared to challenge it during the endurance race of the Mini Baja West competition.

Nature fought with a two-mile track of sharp curves, steep hills and a mud-spitting water hole. The drivers' only defense was a fierce driving machine entirely assembled by students, prepared to tackle whatever the Kansas land threw at it.

This is the K-State Society of Automotive Engineers' third year to be host to the Mini Baja West. Ninety-one teams from Mexico, Canada and the United States participated in the three-day competition.

Each year, the teams' mission is to construct an off-road vehicle that, when producing 4,000 vehicles, can be manufactured at a maximum of $3,000 per unit. said David Pacey, Mini Baja West coordinator and professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering. Before Saturday, the cars were judged on their design. cost, acceleration, maneuverability, hill climbing ability and a sales presentation.

Pacey said, though, that the endurance race, which counts for 40 percent of the overall score, is his favorite part of the competition.

"The beginning of the race is the biggest moment of the whole thing," Pacey said.

"It's like the start of the Indianapolis 500. It sends chills up my spine."

He said one of the main changes from last year's race was the difficulty level of the track.

"The course is a lot more rugged this year," he said. "We did that mostly because the track is designed to test the cars. We could have a race out here in the pasture, and all the cars could probably do it. This is an off-road vehicle competition, though, and we are giving them the off-road experience."

The driver of the K-State Mini-Baja car, Andrew Moreau, junior in mechanical engineering, noticed a difference in the track. After hanging in for about 3 1/2 hours of the four-hour race, the K-State car broke and had to leave the race prematurely.

"The rear end just fell to the ground," Moreau said. "It had been acting funny for the last lap. but I didn't know it was just going to fall apart like that."

The car broke down over a part of the track where the cars had to climb over logs, an addition to this year's course.

This setback was a surprise. he said, because the car had not been winning, but it was doing well throughout the whole race.

We were being pretty consistent," he said. "We were sure we were going to finish with the rest Mini Baja results of the pack, but things like this

Aaron Weaver, senior in mechanical engineering, has been on the K-State Mini Baja team all three years it has been at K-State. Beating the clock was the biggest frustration this year, he said. There was a lack of time to tune the car and the clutch.

The K-State car received several penalties because its flag fell off, he said.

"At one point we used a twig to fix it and to just get it back on the course," he said. "But it still snapped."

The car took a lot of abuse from the track, he said, and it kept up pretty well.

Troy Henderson, sophomore in mechanical engineering at K-State-Salina, drove his team's car this year and was a member of the team last year. This year's track had some new obstacles. Henderson said.

They put down some rock paths, which were really hard on the tires. The water hole was new," he said.

"The mud made it a lot more difficult. It's a mess, but I liked It.

It was more fun."

Despite the brutal track and K-State's inability to finish the race, team members were optimistic for future competitions. K-State was the site of the SAE Mini Baja West Competition for the third year in a row at Milford Lake last weekend. The competition consisted of universities from the United States as well as several others throughout North America.

"There is still a sense of accomplishment from designing and creating something from the ground up and having no outside help," Henderson said.

State budget negotiations continue between Legislature, Graves

By JOHN HANNA

The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Legislative negotiators struggled Monday to finish the outlines of a plan for balancing revenue and spending in the new state budget, with some urging more flexibility from Gov. Bill

Graves has proposed $117.6 million in tax increases and given legislators a list of reductions, totaling $12.1 million, he would accept in appropriations already approved for the new fiscal year.

House and Senate negotiators are trying to close a $206 million gap between expected revenues and approved spending for the state's 2002 fiscal year, which starts July 1. Graves has threatened to veto any plan that cuts too deeply into state programs.

"If the governor wants to make progress on this budget, I would hope he would be a little more reasonable," Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-

Topeka, said Monday during the budget talks.

Budget Director Duane Goossen said the state has kept down spending on general government over the past two years to make spending increases for education. transportation and social services possible. The governor's list maintains those spending commit-

"Their question is, Can you go $30 million to $50 million beyond this list?" Goossen said. "The

Some legislators said they don't believe state government budgets are too tight to be trimmed. Also, they argue the state shouldn't increase taxes because the economy is softening.

The $4.66 billion in general fund spending that legislators have approved already for fiscal 2002 represents an increase of about $230 million, or 5.2 percent, over fiscal 2001.

The state can't afford it with its current revenues. A budget reconciliation measure approved by the House would trim about $75 million from the approved spending, while the House version would cut about $33 million.

"Obviously, the people of Kansas are suffering a little pain now because the economy's down," said Rep. Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls, one of the negotiators. "If they're spending less, it stands to follow that government ought to be able to restrain its spending.

The negotiators worked on both a fiscal 2002 budget and the outlines of a 2003 budget. They said it will do no good to resolve this year's problems and face similar or tougher budget problems next year. when the final 2003 budget is

They met Monday to discuss a minimum amount of general fund dollars they will need to spend in fiscal 2003 and how much revenue they can raise, then go back to a plan for 2002.

How dead is your Dead Week?

Dead Week? Yeah, that's a good one.

I would like to say thank you for Barker and Kauffman in their promise for a Dead Week because I've got seven papers and two tests this week. Thanks a lot, guys.

How is my Dead Week going? Hmmm. Let's think about that for a second. Oh, yeah, I don't have a Dead Week because I've got assignments in every class. Thanks, K-State.

I have two tests, a quiz and two recitals to perform in. I don't know about you, but that is not dead.

No, the question should be: "How dead will I be after Dead Week?"

They need to change it from Dead Week to 'Give Students Test Before Finals Week.'

The last Dead Week I had was spring break

The only thing that dies during Dead Week is the faint glimmer of hope that I'll actually be passing my courses this semester because the teachers take that as the last week to get in any extraneous information that they possibly can before the final, even if they don't cover everything, they'll just tell you it will be on the final.

Is it normal for my roommate to sharpen knives and mutter something about having finals on Dead Week?

Don't worry about personal hygiene. Your refusal to wear deodorant, brush your teeth, wash your hair or shave speaks to your fiscally sound personal policies.

Doing all that stuff to your body would take valuable money. which you have precious little of if you're looking for a job. If you seem to be a linancially responsible person, you will be that much more attractive to employers.

In addition to independence and financial responsibility. creativity is one of the things that bosses value most. Since this is the case, you should make every effort. to appear extremely creative in your interview. When your poten tial employer asks you a question, try to "think outside the box" before you answer Here's an example of some creative responses

Boss: What do you consider to be your best quality?

You: My love for unmaturally. large clumps of soggy brown rice. animal, what would you be and

You: A radio, because I am jivecrazy!

Boss: But a radio isn't an animal.

You: It is in my world of wacky fun and goodness! All biological concepts are out the window because of new scientific developments! Boss: Excuse me? You: You're excused. Boss: Do you think that's

You: Not as funny as your face,

Boss: Wow! Your answers display a unique creativity and ability to "think outside the box" that I have not seen in any of the other applicants! Let me hire you for a million dollars, OK?

You: Aw, I bet you say that to all

Boss: Ha ha! Priceless! Here, I will give you a company car and some stock options, too!

You see how effective that was?

Just be creative, and you will soon be rolling around in more money than Sean "P. Diddy" Combs spends on court costs every week. I can't guarantee that these methods will find you a good, solid job, but I can tell you that they will leave a lasting impression on any potential employer.

Of course, if you want to take the easy way out, there's always the Career and Employment Services office over in Holtz Hall. They offer many different programs and services that might be of interest to you if you're going out into the real world. Who knows? Their advice might even be as helpful as mine.

Future column ideas list wraps up semester

This is my last column for the semester, perhaps forever. So here's a brief synopsis of some of my column ideas that have to be realized.

VINCE JACOBSON/Collegian

1) Tara Hudson of the Women's Center wanted me to inform everyone that nearly every bar in Aggieville is inaccessible to the disabled. Aggieville's two best bars, Auntie Mae's and O'Malley's Alley, are extremely wheelchair unfriendly. It's a disgrace that the disabled are forced to drink solely at Busty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

2) The military says they don't want gays to serve because it would be bad for "unit cohesion." But what's worse for unit cohesion, a homosexual who wants to serve and is a good soldier or, as the military did during the Vietnam War. draft a bunch of hippies who didn't want to serve, didn't want to go fight a war, when they got to Vietnam didn't follow orders, spent their entire tour of duty stoned on drugs and sometimes even fragged their commanding officers?

There's only one reason gays can't serve openly - the military establishment is homophobic. Do you really expect our nation to be protected by a milliary that's full of people who are not even secure with their own sexuality?

3) Last week it was revealed that former Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska, well respected for his honesty, integrity, candor, intelligence and for his military service, lead-a mission in Vietnam in the dead of night that resulted in the deaths of a number of unarmed women and children.

The lesson learned: America gets it. Kerrey has received nothing but sympathy. The nation realizes that war ishorribly messy and if culpability is to lie anywhere it's with war Itself, not the warrior. What probably wasn't realized, as Kerrey stated is that there is something worse than dying for one's country and that's killing for one's country.

4) The intrinsic value of a diamond is nearly equivalent to a chunk of glass the same size. De Beers has a near monopoly on the diamond trade and thus controls the price that it horribly inflates. De Beers has no offices in the U.S. because it breaks all kinds of anti-trust laws.

Moreover, a small but significant number of diamonds on the market are "conflict diamonds." These diamonds fund rebels in Africa to continue their monumental brutalities upon civilians. The next time you're thinking about buying a diamond, check out a Web site on the children of Sierra Leone whose hands and feet have been lopped off by machetes.

5) One of the greatest exploited groups of people in the U.S. are the college athletes of revenue generating sports. Everybody from the coaches, to the schools to ESPN and Nike are making dough hand over fist, but not the athletes themselves. Athletes can't even receive $20 for gas money to go home to see their sick mom without breaking NCAA rules. What do you think will happen if they have March Madness and none of the players show? With billions of dollars on the line, the athletes might finally get their fair share.

6) Playwright Tom Stoppard said, "The matrix of our moral sensibilities is in the arts." Hanging in the Nelson-Atkins is my favorite portrait, Frankie the Organ Buy (1907) by George Bellows. The painting is of an undernourished street boy who is dressed in fine clothes and posed upon a line leather chair. Bellows painted Frankie's portrait in the same dent of a major bank. The portrait is a declaration that Frankie, as a human being, possesses dignity and is deserving of our notice and highest respect.

7] Our culture has become so radically egalitarian that it has falsely come to believe that all opinions are equally valid. The truth is that some opinions are more valid than others. If you're going to form an opinion, base it on fact and derive it through logic and reason. I'm fired of people expressing opinions based on ideas they've yanked through their sphincter.

8) Our culture possesses a morbid fascination with the criminally insane, i.e. the Jeffrey Dahmers and Ted Bundys of the world. These people are nothing but freaks and anomalies.

More deserving of our attention are those with such a strong sense of morality that, even when surrounded by great evil and at great personal risk. they do righteousness. We all like in think we would have defled Nazi rule and hid Anne Frank. What will you really do when all around you lose their moral bearings? Will you do good or stand by idly and claim that, as a single person, you could do nothing?

9) The underlying themes to all my columns: Not everything is for sale. There exist things of great value upon which can't be put a monetary price. Hate the behavior, but pity the person who commits them. Helping others help themselves help ourselves, too. Defeating one's enemies is meaningless unless you teach them why they were wrong. Life derives meaning through service to others. The most important thing there is is love. And finally - party on.

Students must take stand against recent budget cuts

In light of the recent budget cuts, causing a decreased amount of money to be allotted to universities across Kansas. we feel it is important to encourage the students of K-State to take a stand.

The education we receive here should not be shortcut by such a problem and there is a way to be heard. Writing to our state congressmen is the first step to being heard.

If only a few of us do it, we might be heard, but if all of us do it, then we can instigate a change and make our time spent here worth what we are paying and what we expect.

The Kansas government must listen to its citizens, and each letter that is sent will remind our representatives of the necessity and importance of education to each of their constituents. It is ridiculous that money should be taken away from education, which is the cornerstone of our nation.

If we cut the money spent on education, not only will our education be watered down by less qualified teachers. but also by increased tuition and classroom size. The spiral must stop and we must be the ones to do it

It only takes 15 minutes to write a letter, and the power behind your words will make the change we desire to happen (as opposed to spending another year at K-State because the class you need cannot be offered each semester).

In order to expedite the process, there is a stack of pre-written letters in Waters 221 that you can sign and put in an

We have also provided a list of Kansas legislators, their addresses and a copy of the district maps for your convenience.

We encourage each person to send a letter to his or her district representative and senator. Each of you can make a difference and we hope this letter encourages you to do that - not only this time, but also in the future when you would like to see a change.

Our nation is only great because of the people who make it up. Therefore, it is your responsibility to aid in the progress of our nation by making your voice heard.

The members rehearse four days a week and might receive two hours of credit for participating in the group. Senior distance runner overcomes heart surgery, sets NCAA-provisional qualifying mark in 5,000-meter run.

By DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

ecember 14, 2000, was supposed to be another typical run for senior track star Annie Wetterhus. Her body had another idea. Despite being diagnosed with an irregular heartbeat as a junior at Morton (Ill.) High School, the returning NCAA All-American never had any severe complications - and she'd been running since seventh grade;

In fact, doctors even told her not to worry. "They said it was no big deal and would never cause me any problems," Wetterhus said. "And that's the only thing I ever knew about my heart." Until this past winter.

THE WORKOUT

It was the Thursday of finals week at K-State, and Wetterhus and her distance teammates embarked on a routine - yet up-tempo - sevenmile run at Hunter's Island, south of Manhattan.

The harsh, rigorous five-degree temperature began to set in as the Wildcat runners, monitored by coach Randy Cole, endured the off-season workout.

Nearing the three-mile mark, Wetterhus felt an unusual pain in her chest, leaving her gasping for air. "It almost felt like my heart flipped upside down and starting beating weird," Wetterhus said, She slowed to a walk, but the irregular heartbeat persisted As a runner trained to push herself to the limit, ignoring the body's ailments and maladies. Wetterhus pressed on. "So I just kept running," she said. "I ran four more miles with my heart like that. But by the sixth mile, Wetterhus felt the worst

"I looked over at Coach Cole, and I said, 'I thought I was having a heart attack back there. So I thought it was over. I just thought it was over. Only the worst was yet to come.

my ribcage, and it was just going crazy.

'I couldn't breathe. I started blacking out." She quickly grabbed teammate Amy Mortimer's hand and placed it on her ribcage. "Oh my gosh, Coach. We've got to get her to the hospital." Mortimer shricked to Cole.

The two hopped into Cole's pickup truck, racing Westerhus back to the training room at Ahearn Field House: Mortimer tried to check her teammate's pulse on the way, but to no avail. It was beating far too fast for the sophomore to count.

"I was really worried," Mortimer said, "because she kept asking me if she was going to die. But I knew I had to stay calm for her - because if I got upset, she was going to get upset, too.

After a quick look from athletic trainer Shawna lordan, the emergency room was called, and lordan rushed the senior to Mercy Health Center nn College Avenue.

Cats look to continue 3-game winning streak

Kansas State Collegian

K-State will look to run its winning streak to four games this afternoon in the first of a two-game, home-and-home series with the Wichita State Shockers.

Action begins at 4 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field, and the series comes to a close at 7 p.m. Wednesday evening from Eck Stadium in Wichita.

The games with WSU (34-20, 15-9) will be the Cats' fourth and fifth in a 10-day stretch that will see K-State (24-22, 9-15) play eight games. The Cats play the University of Kansas this weekend in their final Big 12 series of the year.

"Those are big games because they're against teams in Kansas," senior Mark English said. "Wichita State and KU are always important to us."

English, the co-Big 12 Player of the Week, broke out of his slump last weekend, going 6for-10 with seven RBI and two home runs as the Cats swept Missouri in a must-win, three-game set with the Tigers. The Cats now sit ninth in the Big 12 standings, one spot away from a trip to Oklahoma City for the Big 12 Tournament.

Though the games with the Shockers don't count in K-State's postseason chances, there's still a lot on the line this afternoon with plenty of connections between the two schools. Last season's matchup saw each team earn a win in the other's ballpark.

K-State dropped game one in Manhattan 7-2 before handing the Shockers their worst loss in series history, 18-6, the next evening in Wichita. Still, Wichita State has had the Cats' number lately, taking seven of the past eight meetings in the series.

"We definitely need to continue the momentum," senior pitcher Scott Tallman said. "We've built it over the last couple of weekends by winning 12 of our last 14, and now we have a little urgency to ourselves. and we know that we probably have to win out to get to the tournament, and that's all that matters. Every game counts now, from here down the stretch."

K-State has been solid down the stretch. with seven of those 12 wins coming against conference opponents Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and Missouri. After the sweep of Missouri, head coach Mike Clark identified some familiar keys to K-State success against the Shockers.

Pitching wins ball games," he said. "We're getting solid outings out of the guys on the mound now, and with a solid defense behind them, we're on our game, and we're more confident."

With bragging rights and possibly a Big 12 Tournament bid on the line this weekend.

some excited teammates after his solo home run in the third inning Sunday. The Wildcats hit three home runs in the inning and scored seven times against Missouri.

Kasey Weishaar is met by

MIKE SHEPHERD/ Collegian

English said the Shockers will be good competition for a K-State team that is k oking to finish the regular season.

"Wichita State is a great way to get ready for the biggest series of the year, which is now KU," he said. "Wichita State is a pride game. Everybody knows everybody, and it's just a game where you want to go out and play well. There will be some big crowds, so we have to play well, have pride and keep things rolling."

It's time for me to do what Jerry Rice should have done a long time ago.

That's right - happy trails to me. I've decided to hang up my cleats and move on to the next chapter in my life (honestly, I'm wearing cleats as I write this, and it's not easy because they already were a size too small when I was patrolling the little league outfield in them 10 years ago).

Although I was "placed on waivers" by the Collegian after my rookie semester, I made a determined comeback bid, and I've been here ever since. Talk about a Cinderella story.

Mortimer rode along, holding Wetterhus' hand from the back seat of the car.

'We were singing, 'Jesus Loves Me' to try and keep me awake," Wetterhus said. "I was just in and out of consciousness.'

By the time they reached the hospital, Wetterhus was noticeably blue. Doctors found her pulse at an alarming 230 - and it wasn't coming down.

The ventricle was firing so fast that her atrium couldn't fill up with blood. The heart was pumping, but the blood wasn't flowing through her body, preventing her from getting much-needed oxygen.

In turn, doctors were forced to stop Wetterhus' heart and restart it again at a normal pace, using a special chemical.

After a series of tests and a night in the hospital, she was released - but not without an important decision to make.

THE DECISION

Wetterhus was faced with three specific options. She could refuse treatment and hope no further problems would arise, take a special medication for the rest of her life, which might or might not fully rid the problem, or undergo corrective surgery.

She chose the latter.

"It was by far the scariest one of the three, but I just decided that I wanted to get it over with, just deal with it and go on with my life," Wetterhus said.

But she didn't decide without the advice of her father, lames.

"I called him and I said, 'Dad, what do I do?' And he goes, 'Well, Annie, for me, this is a no-brainer. Do you want to take medicine for the rest of your life?

"And I just decided this was the only option that allowed me to have my life the way I wanted to live it," she said. "So, therefore, that's the one I went with."

THE OPERATION

On Dec. 28, Wetterhus traveled to see heart specialists in the Kansas City metro area. The procedure was termed radio frequency born with an extra pathway in her heart, which caused a short circuit in the blood flow process. Instead of the pulse going down and out through her body, it went down and returned back up through the extra pathway.

During the operation, doctors went in through Wetterhus' leg and through her veins, entering the heart valve and burning away the cells that make that extra pathway. In turn, scar tissue was created over that area, preventing the pulse from redirecting itself again.

Pretty much, they say I'm cured," Wetterhus said. "The only way we'd know that I wasn't is if I had another problem. So for the time being, I'm fine."

THE RECOVERY

Wetterhus' return to track form had its share of bumps along the

In her first meet, the Big 12 Indoor Championships in Lincoln. Neb., she finished ninth in the 5,000-meter run - just a splitsecond from finishing eighth and scoring a point for K-State.

"I don't know. I'm a real Christian person, but sometimes I'm just like, God, what are you thinking?' Because the top eight score, and I got ninth by, like, this much," Wetterhus said, holding her thumb and forefinger only an inch apart. "And I just picture him sometimes - just up there laughing, just making me try that much harder.

"But I think those things happen to me because it makes me try harder and makes me more determined. Heck, maybe if I would have gotten seventh or eighth in that race, I wouldn't be where I am right now. It just made that much more motivated."

But now, after gradually working herself back into shape, Cole said Wetterhus has overcome her near-death experience and is running better than ever.

"For what she's doing now from where she was back in the winter. it's really amazing," Cole said. "She's a pretty tough, hard-nosed

"It's just pretty inspiring and makes you appreciate the basic opportunity - to get a chance to run, to get a chance to coach, getting a chance to work in a school, getting a chance to go it school. It makes you appreciate those things.

In fact, at Thursday's Drake Relays in Des Moines, lowa, Wetterhus hit a NCAA-provisional qualifying mark with her secondplace finish in the 5,000-meter run. Her time of 16:45.27 was a careerbest for the senior, and the seventhhest in school history.

Not to mention, Wetterhus set a career-best in the 3,000-meter run earlier this spring - on two occasions. After running a personal record April 15 at the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz., she broke that mark six days later by over five seconds, placing first in the KU Relays with a time of 9:36.37,

"I was shocked," Wetterhus said. "I wasn't expecting it at all. I just really feel like my season's been salvaged, and I'm just trying to have fun and enjoy it because it was almost all taken away from me

"Now that I'm running well again, it's just kind of bittersweet."

makes for a hard life. Yeah, I wear my sunglasses at night, but with good reason my friends.

I was vilified when I spoke out harshly against the XFL, but one reader recently told me "Chris, you were right. The XFL was about as extreme as my college algebra class, and I've seen more scantily clad girls on the walk to the Union on an August afternoon. I'd rather watch an NFL player do a country line-dance to 'Who Let the Dogs Out?' than listen to Jesse Ventura do color commentary."

Ah, the sweet smell of redemption. During my career I've seen my share of game-related injuries. The list reads like an episode of "ER": numerous typing-related calluses, dozens of headaches from staring at a monitor and a stab wound suffered when my pencil slipped during an especially intimidating interview with coach Bill Snyder. But I've never missed a day. I'm called "little Cal-Ripken' around the newsroom, and I wouldn't have it any other way.

I've been unwavering in my attachment to the Royals and my hatred of Cleveland. I might take the bus, but you'll never see this lan on a bandwagon.

I'll never regret my time at K-State. There's nothing better than watching David Allen receive a punt at the two-yard line with the wind in his face and the sun at his back and 98 yards of green carpet in front of him while every fan in KSU Stadium thinks, "We've got them right where we want them," and the opposing coach is kicking himself for not punting the ball into the parking lot.

It's not the women, the fame or the money that make this job so. perfect. They're just icing on the cake of good fortune.

So this is it. I'm going to adjust my jock strap one more time, take one more pat from the rosin bag and walk away from the Collegian at the top of my game

Today, I feel like the luckiest man on earth, and I'm 99.9 percent sure I'll never come back.

No extra-innings for this ball player. Point toward the sunset. I'm ready for my exit.

Women's golf makes regionals

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's golf team will compete in the regional championships for the first time in school history, the team announced Monday.

The Cats were the 19th out of 21 seeds and will play May 10-12 at the Finley Golf Course at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

While the team was selected for regionals, its fate was up in the air until 2:30 p.m., especially after the Cats' performance at the Big 12 Championships. At Harvester, Iowa, K-State finished ninth, its best finish ever, but whether that would be good enough for regionals was unknown.

As a result, head coach Kristi Knight's nerves were tight before receiving the awaited phone call.

"I was talking to some other coaches, and I was thinking that we would know by lunchtime, and they were like, 'No, it could be as late as 3 p.m.," Knight said. "I figured we would be the 19th seed, certainly no higher than the 18th seed. I'd like to be a little higher where we're going instead of if."

Qualifying for regionals also shows how much the team has improved in the last four years, senior Carrie Chambers said.

"It's maybe more of an accomplishment because my freshman year we wouldn't have even considered making regionals," Chambers said, "so it's maybe more gratifying."

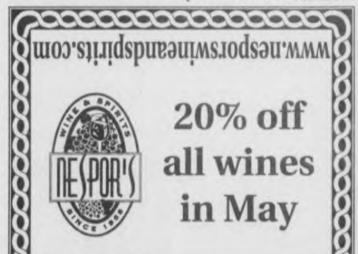

Freshman Christine Boucher leads K-State with a 76,57 stroke average in 26 rounds, which ranks 99th in the country according to Golfstat. Junior Edie Murdoch's 78.80 average is second, and she ranks seventh in the country in fairways hit, at 89.5 percent. Sophomore Miranda Smith has a stroke average of 78.86, Chambers has averaged 78.96 strokes and sophomore Elise Carpentier averages 79.95 strokes.

A total of 321 individuals and 63 teams are selected to the three regional competitions. The top eight teams and top two individuals from each regional will advance to the championship finals May 22-25 at Howey-in-the-work. Toward the beginning of February, Forbes passed out at baseball practice, and he spent the next three and a half weeks in the

"I was at 170, and then I got sick, and I got down to 130 pounds - that's an eighth-grade boy," Forbes said. "I'm from Colorado originally, so my parents moved out here for the month. My sister came out. My friends came in."

Despite the bleakness of the situation - Forbes now only had two months to live - the forecast took its greatest toll not on the patient but on those around him.

"It wasn't really as much what was said to me," Forbes said. "It was that my mom heard that; the girl I was dating heard that. They didn't have my same type of mentality, so it was hard for them to get over."

Cancer was ravaging not only Forbes' body, but also his spirit and that of his friends and family. So when March finally rolled around. Forbes began to realize that he had to change his entire mentality towards the disease.

'I was like, 'Well, I'm going to start getting back into baseball. not going to miss any practices, not going to miss any games and just make this part of my job," he said. "Cancer treatment was going to be part of my job."

So Forbes returned to the baseball field, balancing coaching with the full-time endeavor of trying to save his life. That's where the gunshot entered and cemented his dedication to living.

"I was going off to radiation therapy at KU Med Center at the end of March. I was leaving the hospital, and it was about 4:30 in the afternoon, going to get some Mexican food, and a guy tried to carjack me - opened my door and shot me in the stomach," Forbes said. "I was driving off, and I just drove myself back up to the

"I was stuck in Westport traffic. I was having to wait at lights. I got shot at 4:30 p.m. and got to the hospital at 5:05 p.m. It was only two miles, and I'm having to wait at lights and having to be patient. I didn't panic because it was just like, 'What, are you kidding me? I just got shot?' I drove back up there, went through four hours of surgery, got done about 10:30 p.m. The next morning, I checked to go to our game in Allen turning point for me. It's sad to say. I probably could have done without it," he said, "but things happen for a reason, and I think that's one of the reasons why that happened. I went to the game the next morning, coached, and the kids were just amazed. It took every excuse they could ever have - the flu, anything - off the

"I was just really of the mindset that I am not going to stay in the lying down. And it was right then that I came back out, I fired every single one of my doctors - every one - and started from scratch."

Forbes had changed his entire mentality. He was more positive and tougher, but that new attitude would be tested. In early March, Forbes found out what he already had guessed - that he didn't have Hodgkin's. The symptoms, which had increased in severity so quickly, were not analogous to those commonly found with Hodgkin's. Instead, Forbes had non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, a much more serious disease. And the fear returned, at least for a while.

Once again, the dismay wasn't with.

"I'm back to the point now where I'm not scared of anything I hear, and I'm not scared of cancer," he said.

Last fall, Forbes joined the K-State staff, and while he officially coaches the catchers, hitting and first base, he also brings an important attitude to the team, senior outfielder Kasey Weishaar said.

"It's just real positive, a real positive outlook on all of us - he brings to us every day," he said. "The other day, somebody was like, T've got the flu. I don't know if I can practice,' and he was like, Well, you know what? I've got cancer, and I think you can make Forbes' influence might be positive, but he's still dealing with a worst case scenario. He has two brain tumors.

But Forbes has found a way to cope with his illness.

"You weren't just born into a cancer patient - maybe you were a teacher, maybe you were a baseball coach. You were something and somebody before you got cancer. Let's talk about that. Get yourself into a better

For Forbes, that better spot was on the baseball field.

"This is pretty therapeutic, being around the guys," he said. "Coach Clark and Coach Hensley are all very positive people. It gets out here, and everything is still better than your best day with chemotherapy.

Forbes also has taken the offensive in his treatment of his cancer. He reads everything, becoming the most educated cancer patient he can. And he helps others cope with their own diseases by speaking to patient groups and visiting children in the hospital.

"Even in the worst-case scenario now, I feel a lot better in the way that I've been proactive, and I know that I've helped probably some people," Forhes said, "especially with the speaking and going to Children's Mercy and sponsoring kids.

Forbes still deals with cancer, but with the knowledge that he can face the challenge.

"Every time I've prayed, I've never prayed to God to take away my cancer." Forbes said.

"I always prayed to ease my parents' minds or my sister's mind or my friends and family, ease their minds.

"Even people around here, they hear you have cancer, and the first thing they think of is it's an incurable disease. Well, are you living with cancer or are you dying with cancer? That's the decision you have to make.

Daniel Hunt, assistant professor of art, started working on his sculpture of Army chaplain Emil Kapaun one year ago. Kapaun, a Kansas native and World War II and Korean War veteran, died while imprisoned in a POW camp in Korea. The statue will be dedicated this summer in Kapaun's hometown of Pilsen, Kan.

K-State professor creates monument in honor of U.S. war hero

By JJ DUNCAN Kansas State Collegian

Towering above anyone or anything else in the room, the sculpture of Army Chaplain Emil J. Kapaun stands as a clay sentinel, caught in a moment forever, helping a wounded soldier.

Daniel Hunt, assistant professor of art, has been working on the sculpture since he was contacted about it last summer. The piece will be a bronze monument to Kapaun, who died while serving in the Korean War as a chaplain. It will be displayed in his hometown of Pilsen, Kan. Hunt said it has been an honor to work on a monument to such a genuinely good person and he wants the piece to show the type of "When I started on this I didn't want Nepomucene Catholic Church. In 1950, the Korean War began, and Kapaun was granted permission from the bishop to serve as a chaplain in the war. In 1950, shortly after the war began, Kapaun was taken prisoner by the North Koreans and placed in a camp. Kapaun did all he could to help by taking care of the sick and wounded, administering religious services and even stealing food and medicine for the men. Kapaun prayed to St. Dismas, the good thief who in the Bible was crucified beside Jesus.

to help him steal the supplies needed.

In 1951, while still in captivity, Kapaun bumped his leg too hard on a log and died a few weeks later from the resulting blood clot. Two books have been written about the chaplain, and those who knew him in the war still admire him, said Rose Mary Neuwirth, Holy Family Parish member of St. John Nepomucene Church.

"He helped anyone and everyone who needed it," she said. "Their faith wasn't an issue. In fact, a Jewish prisoner in the camp with him carved a crucifix and gave it to the Church after the war in memory of him."

Neuwirth is the head of a committee planning the unveiling of the monument, and she said the event will be memorable for the small town of Pilsen. Archbishop Edmund O'Brian of the Archdiocese for Military Services will be celebrating the Mass, and people all over Kansas are planning to attend. Neuwirth said. Nearly 1,000 people are expected to be on hand for the unveiling of the monument, and Neuwirth said survivors who knew Kapaun during the war also are planning to attend.

"I wish I could show you the letters I've gotten from people who knew him during the war." Neuwirth said. "He always helped people. "He was never afraid to go into battle alongside the men. The medics remember him for going out and helping them recover the wounded.' Neuwirth said she has visited the campus often to see the progress on the work and take pictures back to the parish. Working with Hunt has been easy, and his work is impressive, she said. The monument is the largest figure piece Hunt has ever worked on, and he said seeing it near completion is a fulfilling thing because he has surprised himself with his own work. Hunt said he studied Kapaun, as well as details in the military fatigues of the Korean War to make the piece authentic.

A collection of pictures of men in the Korean War, a set of fatigues and even a 50-year-old stole actually worn by Kapaun during the war all have helped, Hunt said. Hunt also has used live models wearing the fatigues to see how certain intricacies appear in real life, he said.

"The part that really makes you look goofy is the little aesthetic decisions," he said. "How does this shirt open? How should this boot open? How should this bandage look? How do you create tension in the hand?

"It's hard to see those things sometimes, and you

Kevin Rutherford, senior in sculpture, has helped by modeling and occasionally helping to sculpt a small detail of the piece. Rutherford said watching the sculpture come together has been a learning experience because he didn't know how to put together such a large piece before.

"I would have had no idea where to start with this," he said. "It's nice to see how to build an armature for something like this and lay the foam and clay on it. I really enjoy just seeing it get done."

Hunt said he also has learned from doing the piece. "During the whole thing, I've felt like a student," he said. "I've learned so many things about the war, about the uniforms, as well as this incredible man. Pve also perfected some of my technical knowledge."

Still, the sculpture is not yet complete. Hunt said that over the next month he will be putting the bronze on the piece to complete it and have it installed for its June 3 unveiling. Though Hunt said he is ready for it to be complete so he can move on to other things, he is happy he took on the project.

"I'm glad I was chosen to do it because it is an honor to pay homage to this guy," he said. "He was an outstanding person.

"There's going to be a lot of people who see this, and on one hand, I guess that's sort of an ego trip, but it's also very humbling to work on something dedicated to him."

Bush's proposal would tie students' annual test results to federal funding

By GREG TOPPO The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A tentative deal between the White House and Senate lawmakers could weaken an important provision of President Bush's education plan, allowing struggling schools to keep federal funding even if some students make little Under Bush's plan, students' scores on annual tests would be tied to federal funding. If schools fail to make adequate progress for three years, they would be required to use as much as 15 percent of their federal funding set aside for poor children to pay for students' after-school, weekend or summer tutoring, or for transportation to another public school

Senate aides on Monday said they had worked out a tentative agreement in which states and school districts would have to give up the funds only if students in different demographic groups fail to make one-third of the required annual progress on tests.

For instance, if a state determines that a school district must increase the percentage of Hispanic students who can read proficiently by 60 percent over 10 years, the agreement would take one year's worth of progress - in this case, six percentage points - and give schools three years to achieve the goal.

Individual schools, meanwhile, would have to reach a state's goals, but would be able to average test scores schoolwide so they are not penalized if students in certain demographic groups do poorly. Any progress whatsoever by such groups would keep a school from being labeled as "failing." Under the agreement, groups would be determined by ethnicity, English proficiency, income and whether the students are in special education.

"What we found is that the bar we set was, frankly, too high," one Republican aide said.

The Senate takes up Bush's education plan this week.

The House Committee on Education and the Workforce begins debate on its version of education legislation Wednesday. House negotiators on Monday said they reached a tentative agreement that would let school districts use half of their federal funds virtually as they see fit - without approval from either federal or state government.

Under the plan, school districts could spend the money on class size reduction, teacher salaries, improved technology or whatever else they decide will raise test scores.

In exchange for the flexibility, schools would have to show better student test scores.

A program that would have given such flexibility to states was axed by negotiators, but Republicans said they might offer it as a floor amendment.

Consumers say rate increase unnecessary

The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The state's largest utility should be cutting costs instead of asking for a rate increase, the consumer agency charged with protecting residential and smallbusiness energy customers says.

"The company is not mindful about saving money," said Walker Hendrix, chief attorney for the Citizens' Utility Ratepayers Board. "They really spare no expense when it comes to their executives."

Hendrix said the utility's extensive use of corporate jets for out-of-state travel, its choice of an exclusive Arizona resort for a recent board of directors meeting and its decision to spend $1.5 million to build new executive offices undermine its case for a $151 million rate increase.

"It seems to me that this is a time when they need to scale back rather than continuing to spend money on things that aren't essential to their basic operations," Hendrix said.

Kim Gronniger, a Western spokeswoman, said none of the cost of the office renovation project or the airplanes was included in the rate

"The rate increase request is based solely on our costs of providing reliable electric service," she said.

The Kansas Corporation

Commission will begin technical hearings on Western's proposed rate increase on May 17. Public hearings were held last week.

The commission's staff and other interveners in the case have urged the KCC to significantly cut Western's rates, not increase them.

As evidence of excess, some point to the $5.4 million one-time bonus paid to Western chairman David Wittig in 1999 and a severance package that obligates the company to purchase his $1 million house if he leaves the company.

"I think when they (shareholders) found out how much he was getting paid, it blew their minds," said Dennis Nelson, branch manager of the Topeka office of US Bancorp Piper Jaffray.

The bonus was paid at about the same time that Western's stock was plummeting and its merger with Kansas City Power & Light Co. was coming undone.

Some lawmakers also have expressed concerns about the rate

Rep. Tom Sloan, R-Lawrence, vice chairman of the House Utilities Committee, said he is tracking allegations being made about the company's spending and management practices in testimony filed in the rate case and in media reports.

Recreational Services' Office Located in Peters Recreation Complex

For those students taking classes or working at K-State this summer, Recreational Services offers many exciting opportunities and activities. "We offer softball, volleyball and basketball as intramurals during the summer time," said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. "However, the number of students participating during the summer is down, so the divisions are limited as well." Softball and sand volleyball are offered in co-rec divisions only. Basketball offers an open division that anyone can play in. There are also faculty/staff golf events held throughout the summer as well. "There are three different faculty/staff golf events during the summer," said Martini. "The final event is for couples to participate in." The golf events are held at Rolling Meadows, Colbert Hills and Stagg Hill golf courses. During the summer months, the hours of the Rec change as well. The Rec Complex is open Monday through Friday from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., Saturday from 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and Sunday from 1:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. In addition to summer intramurals, the Wellness Resource Center is open, as well as the Natatorium and Outdoor Rental Center. "The Outdoor Rental Center is very busy during the summer months," said Martini. "Everyone should take advantage of the opportunity to rent equipment and enjoy the weather." Aerobics and Aqua Aerobics are also being offered during the summer. Spring semester students not enrolling in summer classes can purchase a summer pass for $10 per month. So if you are staying in Manhattan this summer, take the time to enjoy all of the many activities and programs offered by Recreational Services at the Rec Complex and Natatorium.

My Favorite Workout

Although George Ryan, sophomore in pre-vet/animal science, has only been at K-State one year, he was quick to make the Rec a part of his routine. "I try to come in three to five times each week for about an hour each time," said Ryan. A native of Overland Park, Kansas, Ryan comes to the Rec with friends or by himself, depending on the day. His usual routine is a cardio warm-up, a free weight workout, and a cardio cool-down. Ryan says working out at the Rec is a relief from the daily grind. "Coming to the Rec helps me relieve stress and it helps me get into shape," said Ryan. One of the biggest motivators to keep him coming to the Rec is the results he sees in the mirror. Ryan has advice for those who are having a hard time getting to the Rec as often as they would like to: "Get in a routine and it makes it a lot easier to keep coming."

Words of Wellness

Laughter is the shortest distance between two people.

Working at the Rec the past four years has taught A. J. For the past year and a half, Julie Clark has worked at Lovitt many different life skills. "I have learned time management, responsibility and communication skills," said Lovitt. A senior in Finance, Lovitt works both as a building supervisor for Recreational Services and as an official for various intramural activities held at the Rec. Lovitt is from Crab Orchard, Nebraska, and chose K-State based on its academic reputation. Once he got here, Lovitt knew that he wanted to work at the Rec. "I always enjoyed recreational activities when I was in high school, and

I really liked to officiate so I knew the Rec is where I wanted to work," said Lovitt. Lovitt also enjoys working at the Rec because it provides him the is the fact that I have a great time with my fellow employees and have built a lot opportunity to meet lots of different people. Lovitt will graduate in May 2002 and of friendships," said Clark. Clark will graduate in May 2002 and plans to teach hopes to move to the East Coast and work in a small, private investment company. "I figured working here would be a great way to meet people," said Clark. "It is also a really fun environment to work in. I wanted to work at the service desk because it allows me to meet the patrons as they come in every day," added Clark. Working at the Rec has also helped Clark learn more responsibility and new problem solving

In May, Flowers Should Bloom - Not You!

While May flowers definitely are pretty, they also provide a good way to get some exercise! Gardening can yield two benefits: lots of beautiful flowers and good exercise. When you garden, you walk around, stretch, dig, and get up and down – activities that even sound like exercise! The next time you're out in the yard, why not emphasize those movements even more. Instead of carrying all your tools to each spot, leave them in a central location and then walk back and forth to get a tool! It might take a little longer, but if the weather is nice, you now have three benefits - nice flowers, good exercise and warm sun! When you dig that next hole, use more arm movements than normal. It's good for the muscle tone! And, when it comes to lifting the fertilizer or seed, lift with your legs instead of your back. This will help to strengthen and tone the leg muscles and keep you from pulling a back muscle! Another plus to gardening is when you grow edible crops. Plant vegetables and fruits and you will reap benefits throughout the summer and even into the fall. So, plan to garden for fun, exercise, healthful foods and beautiful flowers!

Nutritional Notes

Take the Fruit & Vegetable Challenge Is your fruit and vegetable intake where it should be? Do you only get three servings a day like most Americans? If you struggle to get your five servings a day, try these tips to make the challenge easier: Sneak vegetables into casseroles, stir-fries,

- sandwiches and on pizzas.
- · Choose fruit at breakfast, add fruit to your cereal
- or yogurt, or drink a glass of juice. Set your goals small, add one more fruit every
- day, then increase from there. The health benefits of eating more fruits and
- vegetables and other plant foods are obvious: Decreased blood pressure
- * Reduced incidence of several forms of cancer
- Easier to control weight with more fiber So, start increasing your fruit and vegetable intake gradually. You'll enjoy the variety and the health

Making a difference

Ten people who've made their mark on Salina oo often we're too busy to notice the people that really make a difference in our lives. We take time to admire celebrities: sports figures, politicians, generals, actors, TV stars. But what about our real heroes?

During their spring break, 10 students from Kansas State University explored the lives of Salina heroes. You've probably never heard of them. Over the years, they've worked quietly to make things better for Salina people.

These folks could have been more selfish. They could have picked professions that left more time for themselves or required less emotional investment in the people they help. Some could have retired in the fullest sense of the word, instead of volunteering to help others.

But each is a local hero.

Each has made a difference.

Take a few minutes and read about them.

K-State photographers, alumni, mentors spend spring break at the Salina Journal for joint project his special section, which appears in both the Salina Journal and the Kansas State Collegian, was produced by students from Students Publications Inc. at Kansas State University.

The section is the result of an intense, one-week photojournalism class for K-State photographers. Eight current K-State students and two future K-State students met at the Journal from March 18-23 to make the photographs and write the stories in this section.

Seven former K-State photographers, now professionals, came from around the country to be instructors to the students. Photographers from the Journal - who all attended K-State, too - often stayed after their regular shifts to provide advice and encouragement to the students.

On March 21, the students and professionals gathered at the Salina Community Theatre to make presentations at a oneday workshop for 63 Kansas high school students. Students peppered the presenters with questions about their professional experiences such as photographing political campaigns, the civil rights movement and exotic locations for National Geographic.

Akin, 23, is one of five female troopers for the Kansas Highway Patrol, which has more than 400 troopers.

Akin said personal goals include stopping criminals and drug runners. "Interdiction is going beyond the traffic stop, investigating everything around you," she said. "I love to try to find all the pieces of a puzzle and put them together and make sense out of it." Her dedication to stopping drug trafficking comes from personal experience. Over the years, several people close to her have been involved with "People who have such opportunities in life have destroyed them by drugs," Akin said. "It makes me feel so much better to get that stuff off the street before it gets to anyone."

As a trooper, Akin works a variety of assignments ranging from making presentations to schoolchildren to assisting with drug searches. She mainly patrols Saline County, but is also on-call a corrections officer from midnight to 8 in the 18 counties covered by troopers that are assigned to the Salina Highway Patrol office.

Akin works with more seasoned troopers to learn how to identify drug shipments and how to arrest drug suspects.

"It helps when the person you are being helped by wants to be there and knows what's going on," said KHP Trooper Craig Davis. "She stops quite a few trucks, I think she would really like to get a big load of dope out of a semi."

and eligible to apply for the KHP academy in Salina. "This is what I wanted to do," she said. "I don't like being stuck in the office. I like being out on the road and seeing what's going on." Akin doesn't have any children; she's in the

The last three years he also has been awarded the Angel Award from RSVP for volunteering more than 1,200 hours each year, an average of more than 23 hours a week. In March, Kashkin put in 147 hours of volunteer work.

"Leon is really an unusual volunteer," said Nancy Klostermeyer, director of Volunteer Connection. "He is really driven. The service that he provides really livens up any area he is working in."

Kashkin works around Salina, but spends most of his time at the Salina Regional Health Center's intensive care waiting room, gift shop and foundation. He also spends time each week at the First Christian Church. And when the need arises, he works with other volunteer organizations, too.

Working a variety of jobs keeps the volunteering from becoming too repetitive, he said. Kashkin is one of more than 400 senior volunteers in RSVP.

The numbers of volunteers are evidence that senior citizens still have a lot to give to the community, Klostermeyer said.

Kashkin said all he needs is a big smile and a thank you, nothing else, to know his work is appreciated.

oward Lamer is getting out of the grocery business.

After 50 years, he's retiring. Last month new owners took over Lamer's Market at 145 N. Phillips. Business had been brisk for Lamer. The decision to retire comes more than a year after Lamer's wife, Judy, suffered a heart attack.

Lamer had to work the majority of the six 12-hour days the store is open. Judy Lamer had cut back to about two or three hours each day.

"Judy, she's a good gal," Lamer said of his wife of 27 years. "She's just not able to work the hours."

Because the Lamers worked for themselves, there's been little time for vacations and each other over the past few years.

"We've always worked together, but never really had time to enjoy each other," Judy said.

"The store has always come first."

Larner said to make money, they've had to keep the store open. He said they only took 1-1/2 days of vacation last year. "People say 'You don't make enough money for the hours you put in," Lamer said. "That's true, I suppose."

For Howard and Judy, the market has been home.

"(Our) life is in this store," Judy said of the tiny market. "This is a home. This is where my friends are."

And more than a home, it's been a community center.

"This neighborhood is like its own little town because of Mr. Lamer's store," said April Northrup, 19. Northrup visited the store in March with her friend, Wesley Spragg, also 19, who cruised the store's five aisles in roller blades.

Spragg doesn't roller blade in every store, "just Mr. Lamer's store," he said. "He's one of the most trusting people I know. He gave me a charge account when I didn't even have a job."

Sometimes, Lamer said, he's forgotten who owes him, until they come in to pay. He said it's possible some people have taken advantage of him. But he's not concerned.

"Three cents won't hurt a guy," he said. It's that trust that has fostered a bond between the Lamers and their customers, "The people I admire the most are the people without much money," Judy Lamer said. "Their word is good. We've helped them by letting them charge, but they've helped us by keeping us in business."

Minor Harris, a Salina resident since 1956, said he remembers visiting Howard's dad, John, at the original Lamer's Market on East North Street. The elder Lamer opened the store in 1946. Lamer started working there when he was 12. He took over the store after his father retired in the early 1980s. The charge accounts scrawled by hand in a notebook have helped many over the years, he said.

"A lot of people don't have a lot of money, and here they can charge until the end of the week," Harris said. "I know a lot of people in this town, and they're some of the best — right there. Good people, Howard and Judy."

Lamer has plans to help the new owners get started, but after a couple of weeks, he said he doesn't want to work.

"Judy says she's had four people offer me a job if I retire," Lamer said. "I sure wouldn't want a job for awhile. I'd like to see how the other half lives."

Howard and Judy Lamer sold their market last month.

Customers range in age from grade school children to senior citizens. Lamer's Market after stopping to buy some candy.

Mike Fuller prepares boys for the future as leader of Salina's largest Scout troop Carburetors, transmissions, axles, wheels and tires.

These things are Mike Fuller's life. Fuller is scoutmaster for Troop 214, the largest Boy Scout troop in Salina. He's also general manager of Fuller's Auto and Truck Recycling Center, 501 E. Pacific Ave.

"Mike is an excellent scoutmaster," said Gary Shoemaker, district director of the Three Rivers District of Boy Scouts of America. "He does a super job of coordinating the program for the boys."

Fuller said he prepares boys for the future. On a recent campout at Maxwell Lake near Lindsborg, Fuller helped the Scouts cook. Then he stayed with them to eat, rather than eating with the other adults. He played games with the Scouts, took them on walks and taught them about nature as they walked.

Troop 214 contributes to the Salina community this way: it has adopted a two-mile stretch of Old Highway 40, which it cleans three times a year; it sings at nursing homes during the holidays; it performs flag ceremonies in Salina; and it cleans campsites.

The troop's main fundraiser is a spaghetti dinner. The troop donates 10 percent of its profits from the dinner to Trinity United Methodist Church. Other profits go for pots and pans, utensils and new tents.

Fuller likes watching the Scouts grow up to be selfsufficient.

"I watch them cross over into Boy Scouts and they're unfamiliar with how things work," said Fuller. "Then pretty soon they can set up their own tents, do their own things and cook their own meals."

Fuller has been a city-league baseball, volleyball and basketball coach for his son Andrew, 15, and daughter Mallory, 12. He coached Andrew's baseball team for eight years with most of the team joining his troop.

When Fuller isn't camping or being a Scout, he takes apart wrecked or repossessed vehicles and recycles their parts. Fuller's grandfather started Fuller's Auto and Truck Recycling Center in 1931. Now Fuller and his father, Gene, own and manage the store.

Fuller is the kind of leader who plays with his team while he coaches and participates in all the activities that the Scouts do. He said children are a major part of his life. "Youth are a'big deal and we can't give up on them."

Fuller eats lunch with members of the Silver Fox Patrol during a troop campout at Maxwell Lake. He cooks and eats with the Scouts rather than with the adults — the Scouts say he's just one of the guys.

Mike Fuller plays a game of hacky-sack with the boys from Troop 214 of Salina.

At a Scout meeting, Fuller discusses what to do with a young Scout who has an ear infection and is unable to go under water.

During a troop campout in early March, Fuller helps his son, Andrew, drain a pot of macaroni while Darren Deatherage watches. Fuller likes to interact as much as possible with the Scouts to help them learn.

He sits in the front pew of Blue Heaven Studio, the former First Christian Church of Salina. He bought it in 1997 and converted it into a recording studio in 1998.

He tells how he moved from Lafayette, La. to Salina 18 years ago, to get sober. How he overcame his addictions, How he persevered. How he prospered. How he's able now to give back to Salina by supporting local businesses, creating jobs for people trying to clean themselves up, and by saving a historical church. And he talks about music.

"Music moves me, I love everything: classical, jazz, quality pop, rock," Kassem said. "But to me, blues music, man, blues music has the most feel, and is the foundation of so much music. Blues moves me."

It's really the music that's motivated Kassem to help others and to help the community.

Until recently, Marc Sheforgen was a newspaper reporter at the Salina Journal. Now he works for APO Records, Kassem's record label. He grabs a poster featuring The Blues Masters at the Crossroads, a concert that Kassem has produced every year since 1997. He holds the poster in the air.

"Look at this," Sheforgen said. "You think selling 400 tickets pays for these artists? You think this is a moneymaker? This is a money loser. Chad does this for the community. He's trying to give Salina,

Kansas something it has never experienced. A culture that you wouldn't have without Chad,"

Kassem's real moneymaker has been his record business. While still drying out, he learned there was a market for classic used records. As the rest of the world was going digital and to the CD. Kassem was cornering the market on old and some new vinyl with a mail-order business. He added a record label, APO, for reissues of classics and to market the

His current project is to reopen a halfway house for substance abusers. Kassem lived at the PathFinder halfway house, which is now shut down. It's not shut out of his memory, though. He said that with the help of friend Jerry Norris and the community, he hopes to set up a new halfway house.

Funeral Director Ed Karber looks into the monument he sold to the family of former K-State mascot Jamie Adcock, who was killed in a motorcycle accident in 1999. The grave is in Gypsum Hill Cemetery in Salina.

Helping from the heart

argaret and Edna Frank shared a special kind of bond as sisters. For 74 years they shared the same address. Neither one married. Margaret asked Edna to vow to live longer, so that she would not have to experience the grief of losing her sister. But on March 21, Edna Frank passed away.

Ed Karber was a friend to both Edna and Margaret, and served on church committees with Edna. So it was natural for Margaret to ask Karber to handle the funeral. At Ryan Mortuary & Crematory, there is no telling when the phone will ring with a "death call" from families who have just lost a loved one like Edna.

It takes a special person to help these families. Funeral director Ed Karber exemplifies that person. Born in Salina, and raised in Gypsum, Ed Karber got his start in mortuary service at 14, working with his father at the Gillum Funeral Home in Gypsum. When he was 16, he went on his first death call by himself.

Eventually, Karber and his father bought the funeral home. A year later he bought out his father and ran Karber-Gillum Funeral Home by himself. In 1990, Karber sold out to Ryan Mortuary, moving to Salina to be a part of a larger business. Ryan employees still operate the Karber-Gillum Funeral Home in Gypsum.

"Working for Ryan's is like working for myself, without the hassles," Karber said. Karber said that funeral directors have Karber said that funeral directors have to know how to take care of every part of a funeral, from the embalming to working with families arranging the funerals.

"People don't realize the pressure that is put on a funeral director," said Steve Ryan, president of Ryan Mortuary & Crematory. "Everybody thinks of the ghosts and skeletons and Halloween of it all, and don't think about who the efforts are made for." Ryan said that everyone thinks that working with the dead is the hardest part of a funeral director's job, but it's not. He said that part is more of a science. It's working with the grieving families and meeting their needs that's the real challenge. Karber agreed

"In what we do, it all boils down to taking care of the family," Karber said. When Clarke and Elizabeth Garnett lost their 15-year-old son, Karber showed compassion and professionalism.

"You just can't think and your mind shuts down for a while," Clarke Garnett said about his loss. He said Karber supported him and his wife. Garnett said Karber told him to call if he needed anything, no matter what the hour.

"It is unfathomable to me that anyone could have handled our situation in a more professional and sensitive manner," Clarke said. "He did it just like breathing."

Father Kerry Ninemire works with Karber on many funerals, and is also his priest at St. Mary's Queen of the Universe Catholic Church in Salina.

"Being a funeral director is a unique opportunity to be of very special service to people at a tough time," Ninemire said. "Ed does this well. I also really appreciate when funeral directors view their work as an extension of Christ's ministry, and Ed does this."

He serves as chairman of the parish building and grounds committee which is organizing the parish school's $1.5 million expansion. He also assists with communion.

"Ed's been a very reliable and imaginative committee chair," Ninemire said. "He's not content with just keeping the status quo, but is willing to dream big for the future. He's very responsible. When he says he'll do something, he'll do it."

Karber's wife, Connie, summarized.

was unable to move his left arm. Earlier that year, Kmetz's doctor said he might have cancer.

During a biopsy. Kmetz went into respiratory arrest. Eventually he came to, He had survived. And he didn't have cancer. He decided he needed to get closer to God.

That was July 2, 1979. Kmetz said he never looked back. He sold his business and home and went back to school. He graduated from Mid-America Nazarene College in Olathe in 1981, with a degree in religion. By 1987, he'd gotten his master's in divinity.

"During a chapel service, I really felt compelled that I would be working with the down and out, the poor, the downtrodden, the innercity church somewhere. I didn't know where, but somewhere," he said.

In August 1987 he took a job at the Kansas City Rescue Mission as associate director. He came to the Salina Rescue Mission in 1994. The Salina mission is a non-profit agency for men over 18 who have nowhere else to go. The mission also offers the New Life Program for men willing to commit to Jesus Christ and to complete a three-part course of selfimprovement.

Kmetz, now 50, said only a fraction of the men finish the New Life program. Often, he said, they lack self-discipline and self-motivation. The handful who do complete the program have been able to overcome obstacles and become successful, he said.

As a child, Kmetz said he lacked self-confidence and self-esteem.

His past helps him identify with the men at the mission, Kmetz said. The men appreciate the help he provides.

"When I first got here, I thought I was going to be a nobody all my life, but Steve has changed that," Marcus Wayland said. "I wasn't much into God, but now I'm into it a great deal. God can do great things for the world, for us, and he's with us all the time, through thick and thin."

Wayland said he hopes to get his high school diploma and eventually become a police officer.

Ken Jennison, a public service director for the six EBC Inc. radio stations in the Salina area and a member of the mission's board, said Kmetz means a great deal to the men at the mission.

"That shows in the way that he acts and responds to them," Jennison said. "He has their welfare at heart and tries to help them any way he

Kmetz also credits the board of directors of the mission, volunteers, and the men of the mission, who devote a great deal of time and energy to the cause of the mission and to helping each other.

Kmetz speaks to a different church service in Salina every week.

Kmetz said he believes the public must understand that there's an opportunity to make a difference in the lives of the men. He also spends time raising money for the mission and conducting food drives.

Kmetz would like the mission to have more specialized staff, such as a psychiatrist. He'd also like to start a work program through area businesses. He said he plans to stay settled in Salina. On his desk sits a tiny frame with these words:

"Some men look for tall steeples and big bells; give me a Rescue Mission one yard from Hell."

For the past 15 years, Mary has delivered books to people unable to get to the library.

And, for the past five years, Mary has traveled to Lindsborg once a week to be a volunteer archivist at the Birger Sandzen Memorial Gallery. She also serves on the board of directors of the gallery.

When needed, Mary and Gordon also volunteer for the Reymer Society for the Arts at the Red Barn Studio in Lindsborg. And they're both master gardeners. That means they demonstrate gardening techniques and answer questions about gardening for 150 hours a year.

"We see something that needs to be done and say,
"We can do that," " Gordon Reist said.

According to national statistics, there are 28 million senior volunteers in the nation, working 5 billion hours of volunteer time a year. The value of this work would amount to $71.2 billion.

"We were told that when you retire, every day seems like a Saturday," Gordon said. "We have time now to do more things, so we do them."

"We'll probably volunteer until we can't drive." Mary Reist said.

"She was always, always willing to help," said former student Donna Arnold, now in the accounting department at Telephone Sales and Service in Salina. Arnold went back to school at 36 so she could find a better job.

"I know that she helped me a lot," Arnold said. "There were a lot of people who would have never made it through without her help."

Johnson has taught at Brown Mackie since September 1960, always focusing on adult occupational therapy. She said that when she started, the school was beginning to enroll increasing numbers of adult students who had been in the workforce and were coming back for more education.

"I just thought that it was best to help the adult students," she said.

Johnson's students have succeeded in a variety of positions, from bank tellers to private business owners. At Brown Mackie, there are seven employees who were Johnson's students.

Laura Mioton, director of student services at Brown Mackie, was a waitress at the Holiday Inn when she noticed a newspaper ad about the college. The ad asked "Are you happy with your life?" Mioton decided the answer was no. She immediately took action, quitting her job on the spot and enrolling at Brown Mackie. Now she holds two college degrees and gets to work with her former teacher every day.

"Miss I is one of those women who is very consistent," Mioton said.

"She always has a smiley face and a story to tell. She always has that 10 extra minutes for students."

Mioton said Johnson gave her home number to students and spent hours on the phone, offering guidance.

"I would be at home frustrated with my accounting, and I would call her," Mioton said. "We would go over it and she would help me. There are not a lot of teachers that tell you from the very first, 'Give me a call, I'm here to help you,' and then follow through with it. She is definitely a career fter 31 years, nurse Sheri Desaire can't tell this story without crying. Her grandfather died of a heart attack when she was 12 years old. She wanted to help him, but she didn't know how. That's when she decided to become a nurse. "I said to myself, I'm gonna know what to do the next time someone needs me.' I may not be able to help Grandpa but I can help others like him," Desaire said.

Today. Desaire is a endoscopy nurse at Salina Regional Health Center, helping doctors examine patients with a special camera that's mounted on a probe inserted through the patient's mouth or rectum.

"She spends a lot of time with patients getting to know them, and they connect well," said Jerri Philips, a clinical supervisor of endoscopy at SRHC.

"She is the kind of nurse that makes a difference at the grassroots with people at their worst, when they are afraid," said William Alsop, a physician at the hospital.

Not only does she treat the patients; she treats the families of the patients. When the family gets bad news about a loved one, a terminal illness perhaps, Desaire is the one supporting them and crying with them.

"My patients are my priority," Desaire said, "but their loved ones are just as important; they need me too."

Desaire collects Dreamsicle figurines and displays them in a case she received for Christmas last year.

Patients send letters to the hospital praising Desaire.

"She talks to you like a real person, like you're her best friend," said Joyce Ingram, a former patient of Desaire's. "The way she treated me and talked to me kept me calm. She genuinely cared."

Desaire spends as much time as she can teaching patients about a procedure before it is performed "The more they know about what is going to happen, the less scared they will be," Desaire said. Desaire says humor heals. She smiles; her bright blue green eyes shine; she gives hugs and she laughs. "Humor is very therapeutic, it helps relax people,"

Desaire said. "When you laugh your tension drops." Desaire is also a wife and a mother of two daughters. Her husband of nearly 20 years, Marty, works for Salina Snack Sales. Kristin, a senior at Salina South High School, and Kendra, an eighth grader at South Middle School, are Desaire's daughters. She says family life is very important. She says she pushes her daughters to be their best but allows them to make their own decisions.

"Desaire has never met a stranger," Marty said. "No one has met Sheri who hasn't walked away thinking she's been there their whole life,"

"She's caring," Kendra said. "When you need someone she's always there.'

After 21 years of nursing, former patients and staff at Salina Regional say that Desaire makes a difference. To Desaire, nursing isn't just a job; it is something she puts her heart and soul into.

"Nursing is my life," Desaire said. "My patients are my family. The greatest reward is when a patient says, 'You made it easier,' and saying how much it helped having me talk into their ear or touch their arm."

Desaire said that money's not the driving force behind

"I still wish I could win the lottery, but you know what? Even if I did I would still work. I may slow down a bit, but I could never stop nursing." Desaire said a poem in a nursing catalogue brought her to tears one day. It sums up her outlook on life: "If at the end of my life, someone says I made a difference, it was all worthwhile."

Recent student suicides affect campus life

This is the first in a

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

As the semester comes to a close, the lives of K-State students, faculty and staff are getting back on track following the suicides of two students within the past four months.

The first occurred in mid-January, when Sam Wise, Junior in park resource management, was found dead at 12:03 a.m. Jan. 16 in his apartment. The cause of death was determined to be a selfinflicted gunshot wound. No motive of his actions has been disclosed.

Shortly thereafter, the university sponsored a memorial service for Wise. These services consisted of words shared by friends and family of the deceased, scripture readings, and prayer and benediction by the Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activi-

Mark Morgan, associate professor of horticulture, forestry and recreation, worked extensively with Wise, and he said he will not be forgotten by those who knew him.

"Sam will only be forgotten when everyone who knew him has died," Morgan said.

The grieving process has been a long one for him, Morgan said, but in order to heal, friends of Wise must remember three things.

"The three basic elements involved in healing are time, prayer and social interaction," Morgan said. "We need time to think about the past, present and future. We need prayer to help us understand who we are and what our purpose is on Earth. We need social interaction for somebody to talk with and to share the burden and love."

John Graham, senior in accounting and a friend of Wise's, said he agreed that those who are handling the death of a friend or loved one need to keep an open line of communication to help the healing process.

"My advice to anyone who is unfortunate enough to go through an experience like this is to make sure you are open and honest with your friends and family about what you are feeling," Graham said.

Morgan said that although it takes time to heal the wounds, there isn't a set time period for grieving, and that it varies from one person to another.

"For those who knew Sam best, it will take a lot more time," he said. "People handle grief differently."

No one should handle their grief alone, though, Graham said.

"I was fortunate enough to have a large group of caring friends and a loving family that has helped me get through this," Graham said. "Also, don't be afraid to seek professional help. whether you think you need it or not."

Wise, a native of Satanta, Kan., was born Aug. 8, 1979. He graduated from Moving to the United States was an exciting opportunity for Monica Guy, despite two problems. She spoke only Spanish and needed to get a job.

Guy, who works as the executive housekeeper for the Ramada Plaza Hotel, graduated from college in Mexico and came to the United States looking for new opportunities.

She said the language barrier was the worst problem she faced when she got to the United States. "I couldn't communicate with anyone," she said.

She then met a friend in 1993 who asked her if she wanted to make a little money as a housekeeper. Guy applied to provide herself with an income, and she said she knew the language barrier wouldn't be such a problem in the profession.

Guy began her experience as a housekeeper with the Super 8 Motel and Holiday Inn in Manhattan and has been with the Ramada Plaza Hotel for a year and seven months. She has been a housekeeper for eight years.

"There is a better opportunity every time I change jobs better money, hours, and I learn more about everything," she said.

During the period that Guy worked at the Super 8 Motel, she started picking up the English language by listening to other people, television and the world around her, learning the language on her own.

Today, Guy begins her typical day by checking in with her boss. Then she brings the completed room status reports to the front desk so they know how the rooms look, which ones still are occupied with customers and who plans to stay for another night. Then she completes her openings and distributes room assignments to the housekeeping staff.

Housekeeping shifts vary for Guy, and she said her work schedule depends on how many other workers or managers are on staff.

Angel Mejia, front-desk clerk, works with Guy on a daily basis. Together, they keep track of the rooms and various housekeeping duties.

'She is a very hard-working woman and brings the best out of everyone," Mejia said. "She overcame the barrier of not knowing English as a primary language."

Mejia said Guy expects hard work from her employees. but at the same time, she is there for them, too. "She is a key player and is very teamwork-oriented."

K-18 project terminated due to cuts

By SHANNON MARSHALL Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan residents will experience less road construction during the next few months as a result of recent statewide budget cuts.

Construction planned for a portion of K-18 highway east to 17th Street in Manhattan was canceled Saturday, said Marty Matthews, Kansas Department of Transportation public information

The project was not included in the 10-year comprehensive transportation program implemented in 1999.

"This was a preliminary project," Matthews said. "No actual construction had taken place. It was a project that would have taken place if we had money down the road." The K-18 project was one of 14 similar projects in the early stages of development that was terminated. The decision will allow a statewide savings of nearly $18 million.

Matthews said construction on the four-lane section of west K-18 to Ogden still is funded and will not be affected by the cuts.

Although the K-18 work is not included in the CTP plan, some CTP projects also will be terminated as a result of the budget cuts. However, these terminations are not final.

Legislators work toward state budget resolutions

TOPEKA - Legislators slowly moved Tuesday toward agreement on a plan to resolve the state's budget problems - and a confrontation with Gov. Bill Graves

House and Senate negotiators met a fourth day to draft the final version of a bill closing a $206 million gap between expected revenues and spending already approved for the 2002 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

Negotiators started straying Monday from Grayes' list of acceptable spending cuts and were uncertain they could reach agreement Tuesday, the seventhday since lawmakers returned from their annual spring break. and the 92nd calendar day of their session

Restructuring of utilities questioned by lawmakers

TOPEKA - Key legislators called for regulators to stop a restructuring of the state's largest electric utility until the company's business practices can be reviewed.

State Reps. Carl Holmes, Tom. Sloan and Laura McClure, the chairman, vice chairman and ranking Democrat on the House Utilities Committee, brought several concerns about Western Resources Inc. to the Kansas Corporation Commission on Monday.

Their concerns arose as Western, the parent company of KPL and KGE electric utilities. seeks federal approval to restruc ture its holdings and state approval of a $151 million rate increase,

"I want the lights on at a reasonable cost to Kansas consumers," Holmes, R-Liberal, told The Lawrence Journal-World on Monday.

The lawmakers asked commissioners to halt Western's proposed restructuring, investigate transactions that might have depleted the utilities' financial equity, and make recommendation to the Legislature on how to prevent restructuring that hurts

They also want Attorney General Carla Stovall to ensure that ratepayers will not be placed at risk by financial manipulations and corporate restructuring.

KCC Chairman John Wine said the agency has concerns about how restructuring could affect ratepayers and has hired a consultant to help address those

"We have been investigating if there are any steps necessary in order to protect mility ratepayers from losses of unregulated activities," Wine said.

Kim Gronniger, a spokeswoman for Western, declined to comment until the company could more thoroughly examine the lawmakers' request.

Western has said it needs a rate increase to cover the costs of new power plants and increased electric generation.

City adds step to building duplexes

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's growing superduplex conflict reached a milestone Tuesday night with the adoption of an ordinance that would add another step to building structures that meet the official definition.

A 4-1 vote by the Manhattan City Commission, with Commissioner Ed Klimek against, approved an amendment to the city's zoning regulations saying eligible duplexes in certain districts not only must pass zoning regulations like any building, but also must be approved by the Board of Zoning Appeals for a conditional use.

The action stems from numerous complaints in the community about two-story structures, usually geared toward housing a high number of students, that dominate lots and allegedly degrade the neighborhoods where they sit.

The approved version applies to single-family dwellings with no more than two dwelling units per structure. Such dwellings not only must contain two or more stories partially or completely above ground level, but also must meet two of the following criteria: one or both dwellings have no attached garage, the structure covers 30 percent or more of the lot, off-street parking is proposed in front of and behind the structure, and the entire structure is contained on one lot.

Determining this criteria took hours of the commission's legislative meeting two weeks ago. Klimek, who voted against the amendment, said he thought it was too restric-

"It's not my idea that all construction is bad," he said. "We've got to have a place for construction to take place in Manhattan."

The amendment does not prohibit building, Mayor Bruce Snead said, but it does require it be looked at by the people who will be affected.

"I think we need to move on this issue now because there is concern," he said.

The amendment is considered only a quick fix to the conflict, however, and rezoning might prove more helpful in the long run.
"I'd vote in favor of this,"

"I'd vote in favor of this," Commissioner Mark Taussig said, "but I don't think it's a long-term solution."

In other business, the commission tabled the discussion on how to relocate the entrance of the Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community, in part to find out how much Meadowlark might be able to helps with costs. The facility is located southwest of the intersection of Kimball and North Manhattan avenues. With the February decision to place a signal light at the intersection, concerns have been voiced that drivers coming out of Meadowlark will be hit by drivers speeding along Kimball to catch the green light. The area already is a daily collision risk, Meadowlark CEO Steve Shields said.

Though several options were provided by city consultant HWS Consulting Group Inc., the ones officially recommended were creating a new road from Meadowlark to meet with the intersection, or to add left and right turn lanes.

Seattle teachers stage walk-out

By LUIS CABRERA

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Teachers in Seattle and three suburban districts staged a one-day walkout Tuesday to protest state school funding proposals, shutting down classes for 70,000 students.

"We're doing this because every day, our students are being shortchanged," said John Dunn, president of the Seattle Education Association, which represents 4,800 teachers and staff at city schools.

Teachers picketed schools and planned a midday rally at Westlake Park in downtown Seattle. Many also went door to door to distribute leaflets.

It was a coincidence that the walkout came on May Day, the traditional day of labor demonstrations around the world, Washington Education Association spokesman Rich Wood said. He said Tuesday just happened to be a convenient day for teachers in some districts.

The missed day will be made up at the end of the school year, said Lynn Steinberg, spokeswoman for the Seattle School District, She said district officials support teachers' aims, not their methods.

"We are marching arm-in-arm with them on this issue," she said. "At the same time, we're not convinced teachers walking out is the most effective way to communicate that message."

Teachers were protesting the amount of money set aside for education in state budget proposals.

In November, Washington voters approved two education initiatives, one aimed at cutting class sizes and another mandating annual cost-of-living raises for school employees.

But because of proposed budget cuts, some funds earmarked for cutting class sizes might have to be used to maintain existing education programs, according to critics of the budget plans. In addition, the spending plans
